Now grandpa's face was very serious. "There is one verse in God's Word, my little Katie, that it would be well for little girls and boys—and grown-up men and women, too—to remember: 'Be sure your sin will find you out.'"

And I don't think Katie ever forgot it.—Zion's Watchman.

THE POWER OF TRUTH.

How simply and beautifully has Abd-ool-Kadir of Ghilan impressed us with the love of truth in a story of his childhood.

After stating the vision which made him entreat of his mother to allow him to go to Bagdad and devote himself to God, he thus proceeds:

"I informed her of what I had seen, and she wept; then taking out eighty dinars, she told me that, as I had a brother, half of that was all my inheritance; she made me swear when she gave it me, never to tell a lie, and afterwards bade me farewell, exclaiming, 'Go, my son, I consign thee to God; we shall not meet again till the day of judgment.' I went on well," he adds, "till I came near to Hamadam, when our Kafillah was plundered by sixty horsemen. One fellow asked me, 'what I had got?' Forty dinars,' said I, 'are sewn under my garments.' The feilow laughed, thinking, no doubt, I was joking with him. 'What have you got?' said another. I gave him the same answer.

"When they were dividing the spoil, I was called to an eminence where the chief stood. 'What property have you got, my little fellow?' said he. 'I have told two of your people already,' I replied. 'I have forty dinars sewed up carefully in my clothes.' He ordered them to be ripped open and found my money.

"'And how came you,' said he, with surprise, 'to declare so openly what has been so carefully hidden?' 'Because,' I replied, 'I will not be false to my mother, to whom I have promised that I will never tell a lie.' 'Child,' said the robber, 'hast thou such a sense of duty to thy mother at thy years, and am I insensible at my age of the duty I owe to my God? Give me thy hand, innocent boy,' he continued, 'that I may swear repentance upon it.' He did so. His followers were all alike struck with the scene. 'You have been our leader in guilt,' said they to their chief, 'be the same in the path of virtue;' and they instantly, at his order, made restitution of their spoil, and vowed repentance on my hand."—Selected.

WHO WAS THE HEATHEN?

A family in St. Paul, Minn., had never employed a Chinese servant, but thought they would like to try one. Accordingly, one presented himself, of whom several questions were asked. Among them were:

"Do you drink?"

"No, I Band of Hope boy."

"Do you gamble?"

"No, I Band of Hope boy."

"Do you smoke?"

Rather indignantly, "No, I Band of Hope boy."

He was engaged and gave so much satisfaction that a dinner party was given by his employers. Wine was on the table, and the after-dinner cards and cigars were enjoyed. Breakfast was prepared next morning. John appeared, bundle in hand, saying, "I go."

"Why do you go? We like you very much."

"When I come here you say, 'You smoke?' You smoke. You say, 'You drink?' You drink. You say, 'You gamble?' You gamble. You heathen. I no stay."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—In one of the books called "A Wheel Within a Wheel," written by the leader of the world's white ribbon hosts, she tells the following story:

"A father in that level-headed part of the United States known as 'out west' found that his little boy was falling into the habit of telling what was not true; so he said to him at the lunch table, 'Johnnie, I will come around with a horse and carriage at four o'clock to take you and mamma for a drive this afternoon.' The boy was in high spirits, and watched for his father at the gate; but the hours passed by until six o'clock, when the worthy father appeared walking up the street in the most unconcerned manner, and when Johnnie, full of indignation and astonishment, asked him why he did not come as he had promised, the father said, 'Oh, my boy, I just took it into my head that I would tell you a lie about the matter, just as you have begun telling lies to me.' The boy began to cry with mingled disappointment and shame to think that his father would do a thing like that; whereupon the father took the little fellow on his knee and said: 'This has all been done to show you what mischief comes from telling what is not true. It spoils everybody's good time. If you cannot believe what I say and I cannot believe what you say, and nobody can believe what anybody says, then the world cannot go on at all; it would have to stop as the old eight-day clock did the other day, making us all late to dinner. It is only because, as a rule, we can believe in one another's word that we are able to have homes, do business and enjoy life. Whoever goes straight on telling the truth helps more by that than he could in any other one way to build up the world into a beautiful and happy place; and every time anybody tells what is not true he helps to weaken everybody's confidence in everybody else, and to spoil the good time, not of himself alone, but of all those about him.'"

Do you suppose that Johnnie ever again told his father a wrong story? I think he would afterward add to his own and other's happiness by always telling the truth and nothing but the truth in both great things and small.

It pays to be truthful. All the Cozy Cornerers will agree to this after reading the twelfth chapter of Proverbs from the 19th to the 22d verses. Will you not commit them to memory? Affectionately, your

The Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted.—Isa. 49:13.

HOME PROTECTION.

It is the most frequent utterance of intelligent foreigners who visit America: "How much these people think of their homes!"

"Yes, we are nicely fixed!" is the proud comment of the average citizen as he shows a friend over his new house, with its steam furnace, electric lights, hardwood floors, porcelain bath-tubs, perfect sanitation, and the attractive scheme of color that harmonizes its ceilings and carpets, frescoes and furniture. Building associations, rapid transit, fine streets and illimitable suburbs, have opened to the successful wage-worker the possibility of a pretty cottage of his (and her) own, "with all the modern improvements," and "in the maddening maze of things" it is probable that no purpose of life comes so near to adequate completeness as this of home-making. Even the birds of the air have nests, and the beasts of the forests have lairs, and man loves above all else to have a place where he may lay his head, nor is there any utterance more full of pathos than that from the tenderest of human lips, wherein the Son of Man bewails that such a place had been denied to Him. We are born into homes, we live and die in them, and our dearest hope of heaven is that we shall find in its sweet air, "The far-away home of the soul."

Now a political movement that has enough knowledge of human nature to mortgage all these elements of light and leading, to avail itself of that set of the brain and purpose of the heart that center in the thought of home and the love that holds it dear, has placed itself upon the strongest vantage ground of which we are aware. If its object is to protect the home, and its very name declares this to be true, that name becomes a platform broad and firmly based, built out of heart of oak, and that name "a spell to conjure by."

We are coming upon new times. Man stands no longer alone in the arena as the central figure for whose sake parties are made, but a group is there, made up of man, woman and child. The party whose very name proves that its purpose is the equal protection of them all, and of the home that is to them the dearest spot on earth, is the party that deserves to win, and carries in its heart the elements of power. Over against the perfidy of the saloon to every interest that man, woman and child hold dear, the Home Protection party (as some of us have called it long in loving hope) presents the picture of a perfect loyalty. Over against a democracy that does not democratize and a republicanism that leaves the Republic at the mercy of the liquor traffic, the Home Protection party sets up its standard, inscribed: Down with the dram-shop, the brothel, the gambling den, and up with the Home.

Every man's house is his castle, and to none is it dearer than to the hardy son of toil. He knows that the home-folk of this country are his truest friends, and that they would surround his wife and little ones with the sure guarantees and safeguards of the law if they were placed in power. Three hundred labor leaders of Great Britain put forth an official plea for the people's vote on the question of the liquor licenses, declaring that it was only when sodden with drink that the capitalist could hold them down below the level of the "living wage." The friendly sound and genial meaning of the "Home Protection" name will go far to rally the best element of all classes to our standard, for however much the social groups may differ on other themes, they can all sing our campaign song of "Home, Sweet Home," with the spirit and the understanding also.

Some of our hard-headed brethren say, "Yes, that's all very well, but the name has too much sentiment about it!"

But to this we reply: "Assuredly it has, and in this we find its glory and its rallying power." What our present party name lacks so deplorably is this very element of heart and poetry. We want a name that does not deny, but affirms; that does not say, "Thou shalt not," but "Thou mayest"; that does not prohibit, but permits; we want to have the home folk rally to protect the home; we want to declare that since the chief corner-stone of the state is the hearthstone we will make it the head of the corner, and let its ruddy firelight shine out as the beacon that guides men to the ballot box: we want that blessed political power to which white-ribbon women have pledged their faith and works, to be solemnly and gladly christened the Home Protection Party.

"THE NEW WOMAN."

We have already expressed our disbelief in the actual existence of "the new woman" and declared that she was the same old woman who made her advent upon this globe soon after the arrival of Adam. We are forced to acknowledge, however, that we seem to be in the minority, for "the new woman" is a fad of the hour. She has largely crowded the old hackneyed jokes from the funny columns of the daily paper, she furnishes material for many editorials and even sermons, and the average public speaker feels that his duty is not done until he has paid her his respects. Its seems like obstinacy to maintain our skepticism in the face of such a general consensus of opinion, though a careful reading of the various descriptions of the personage under discussion does not tend to change our views. Said descriptions are most contradictory and perplexing. If a real existence, "the new woman" surely has many more "sides" than the famous statue whose color the travelers could not agree upon, and no two observers have seen her from the same point of view.

The truth, however, is not hard to find. There is a sense in which the term "new woman" is entirely correct for the simple reason that there is no period of history when one may not truthfully speak of "the new woman" and also of the new man, except in times of absolute social stagnation, such as are unknown to our western civilization.

"I know that through the ages one increasing purpose runs
And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

But the widening of any human being's thought transforms that human being into a new creature, and the change of environment, so rapid in our modern civilization, makes it impossible that any of us should be just the same that our fathers and mothers were before us. In this sense, the men and women of to-day are "new" men and women. Farther, the term is peculiarly applicable to women because during the last fifty years woman has changed more rapidly than has man; for, up to that time she had not kept pace with him. In the past, woman was held in a semi-servile state and forbidden to take advantage of new conditions and opportunities. Institutions of higher education, from the higher grades of the public schools up to the colleges and universities, were shut against her; the manifold opportunities for greater knowledge and culture were not for her. The young man who sought to become wiser than his father received all praise, but the young woman was sedulously taught that the sphere her grandmother had filled was the only place for her, and the education that had been good enough for her grandmother was good enough for her. Some of these antiquated individuals yet preach that it is a disgrace for a girl to graduate from college and not know how to make a loaf of bread. But this could not endure. It was impossible that man's thoughts should continue to widen and woman's be confined within the old, narrow limits. Either man must return to approximately her level or she must step up to his. The diffusion of knowledge was too great, too easily attained, to be long shut away from her.

The daily paper, the monthly magazine, and cheap books were in every home. By these, woman's thought was stirred into a new activity and when her thought was stirred her subjection was doomed. To this end also the widening thought of man contributed not a little. To that thought, woman's subjection began to appear in its true light as a monstrous thing. In addition to all this, many things have united to force woman into positions entirely different from those of the past. The needs of foreign missions and of home philanthropies led her into new fields of labor and her eminent success in the organization and conduct of great societies and in the handling of large funds prepared the way for still greater departures. Changed social conditions have pushed her out into the wide world to earn a living for herself and often for others dependent upon her. Unless, as some of her opponents claimed, the Creator had denied woman any capacity in that line, it was inevitable that she should develop business ability. It was also inevitable that the business woman should acquire a spirit of independence very different from that of the dependent subject woman who was not allowed to hold property in her own name, was magnanimously "supported" by her husband in view of her helplessness, and who, too frequently, had her pittance of spending money doled out to her as though she were a beggar. The discovery of her natural ability along lines where she was supposed to have none, has also materially changed her estimate of the comparative merits of the masculine and feminine intellect and disinclined her to yield the unquestioning submission due from the acknowledged inferior to his superior. In short, broader education, new fields of work, a new environment, have produced a race of "new" women. The same conditions have also produced a race of "new" men. But, for reasons given, the transformation in the one case has been more rapid and marked than in the other.

In this sense, then, the "new woman" is a fact, and no one need have any difficulty in finding her or knowing her, for she is every woman you meet. The various contradictory descriptions given of her by her critics, friendly and unfriendly, are reconciled, for the simple truth is, that all the women of the nineteenth century, in certain marked and important characteristics, are essentially different from their foremothers. These characteristics are, that in point of intellectual attainments and training the modern woman stands more nearly on a level with man than any woman of the past, that she has greater self-reliance, a truer view of her own powers, duties and responsibilities. She, therefore, refuses, as the woman of fifty years ago never dreamed of doing, to submit to injustice and wrong, and has acquired many new rights before the law. Her inclination to insist upon her rights has brought upon her an immense amount of criticism. It was noble and glorious for our forefathers to refuse to endure "taxation without representation" and kindred wrongs, even at the cost of "their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor." It is utterly selfish and opposed to the spirit of Christ for their granddaughters to peacefully entreat that they be exempt from similar injustice! And that, in face of the fact that the "new woman," as a rule, demands her rights, not primarily for herself, but for the sake of interests dearer to her than life or property. We hear a great deal of the beautiful self-sacrifice of the wife and mother of the past. No nobler examples can be found among them than are furnished on every hand by the self-reliant women of to-day, who do public work and demand their rights, politically and otherwise. It is an easy thing to drift with the tide. It requires the stuff of martyrs to draw upon one's self the malignant criticism of the world by knocking at the door of a closed college, asking for property and political rights, by doing anything markedly outside of the established order of things. Self-sacrifice is noble when it is self-sacrifice. It is neither noble nor ennobling when imposed from without.

The woman of the past had no choice. The only career open to her was that of wife and mother. If she failed of attaining wifehood society had little for her but ridicule or scorn. Her life was accounted all but a failure, something to be excused and explained. Many of the old time wives and mothers were nevertheless women of the noblest type; women who, in spite of the humiliating conditions to which they were subjected, command our respect. But it is the best representatives among them, the exceptionally good women, who are invariably held up as "the woman of the past." The shrew, the slack, untidy housekeeper, whose husband haunted the village inn and whose children roamed the streets while she gossiped with her neighbors, the woman who married for wealth and position and gave herself up to the follies of fashion, none of these are ever mentioned when the "new woman" of the bicycle and bloomers is to be berated. Yet there were plenty of such women. There were many more of them, there were many less of the highest type, than there will be when women marry, not to escape the odium of being "old maids," nor for the sake of being supported, but because love has made them willing captives. If women do not as generally choose marriage under the new conditions, it will be the fault of the "new man." If he measures up to the proper standard he will find no trouble in getting a good wife. But the "new woman" will not tolerate tobacco smoke nor the fumes of whisky and will insist upon purity for purity. He must be a croaker, indeed, who fears that a pure manhood and a more self-reliant and intellectual womanhood will work anything but good to the home. The "new woman" and the new man alike are products of the "increasing purpose" which runs through the ages. Hand in hand and heart to heart they will lead the race up to yet higher planes of thought and life.

SABBATH AT THE CONVENTION.

Twenty years ago the appearance of a woman in the pulpit excited comment, and often severe criticism. Times have changed. The largest and finest churches in Baltimore were open to them, and the demand for speakers exceeded the supply. Sabbath-schools, Christian associations, charity and penal institutions, college girls, etc., asked for talks and songs. The spectacle of fifty women speaking from the pulpits of a single city in a single day was remarkable, and all the more so that they were women of brains and convictions, who had something to say and knew how to say it, and we believe the spirit of the Lord was upon them.

Miss E. W. Greenwood, superintendent of the department of evangelistic work, said: "The church is full of Christian Micawbers, waiting for some great thing to do, while they neglect the duties just at hand. It is not the doing of great things which is needed, but the making of little things great by the spirit in which they are done." She preached at Mt. Vernon Place, Rev. Dr. J. F. Goucher, president of the Woman's College, presiding, who most fervently asked God's blessing upon the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Miss Greenwood presented the "Mission of Service" in a scholarly way, with strong, practical application. "The church of our day tends too much towards being a mere social club, where one can enjoy fine music and listen to eloquent sermons, and the masses are too much neglected."

Mrs. M. B. Ellis, superintendent of legislation and petition, preached to the inmates of the Maryland penitentiary. The prisoners seemed surprised at the presence of so many ladies, and the visitors were visibly affected at the sight of so many human beings dressed in convict garb. "Boys," said Mrs. Ellis in a kindly way, "are you ready for trial?" This awakened interest and surprise. "I do not mean," she continued, "an earthly trial. You have had that. Many of you may consider it a very unjust one, but in the trial to which I refer there can be no injustice, for the Lord Jesus Christ, the Sun of righteousness, is to be the judge, and the sentence will not be measured by years, but by eternity. I come to bring you glad tidings. You may be abandoned by men, but Jesus loves you. There is no prison in the world with bars strong enough to shut out that love." About two hundred convicts raised their hands in testimony of a desire to become Christians.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, superintendent of the scientific temperance department, gave a philosophical, statesmanlike discourse on "Christian Citizenship," at the First M. E. church (the woman's college church) to a very large and appreciative audience. Her main thought was the need of instruction for the children that they may become good citizens.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, secretary of the Y Branch, spoke to the Young Women's Christian Association of the college, rousing their enthusiasm for a Y, which crystallized into action when Miss Willard, Mrs. Barnes and Mrs. Chant, of London, spoke to the young women at chapel services the following Thursday and Mrs. Barnes organized a promising union in the evening. What a recompense for labor to have one of the young women say, "I was so impressed with the Convention that I could not leave even when I was very weary. I noted the beautiful Christian spirit manifested even in the most heated discussions. The W. C. T. U. stands for everything that is good, for everything that means woman's advancement, and I could not be true to my heart's deepest feelings unless I signed this pledge and wore the white ribbon."

Sabbath afternoon an audience of three thousand gathered at Music Hall to hear the annual sermon by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, National corresponding secretary. Mrs. Stevens, of Maine, National vice-president at large, presided. Miss Frances E. Willard was on the platform and her niece, Mrs. Katharine Willard Baldwin, sang several solos with fine effect. The large Convention choir sang and Mrs. Stevenson won the audience by her own beautiful spirit as well as by the sentiments of her discourse. Her sermon is to be given in full to the readers of The Union Signal, so need not be further characterized at this time.

A purity meeting followed the afternoon address. Dr. Mary Wood Allen, superintendent of the purity department, spoke. She said among other things: "Statistics show that the causes of impurity in women are poverty, low wages, dance halls, unhappy marriages, desertion, love of dress." She gave an interesting talk on home training, asserting that lack of it frequently leads to vice.

At night the hall was crowded to hear addresses by several ladies. Miss Willard presided. Mrs. Clara Hoffman, National recording secretary, said: "We must give the hand of fellowship to all agencies working for temperance." She mentioned the Salvation Army members as being obliged to give up intoxicating drinks and tobacco, the work of the Christian Endeavor Society and the press, and said that even the Democratic and Republican press is far more friendly than it used to be.

Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, of London, was introduced and said that the temperance work, great as it is, is secondary to the work of Christianity. She urged individual temperance pledges, "Because you have so great an organization, do not for a moment think that you should any the less compass land and sea to save souls by the temperance pledge." Columns would not suffice to quote from the many services on the Sabbath. The day was perfect and we believe that the Sun of Righteousness transfigured the hearts of the people.

Miss Willard says: "There never was a Convention so much like an opal set in gold as this last one. The weather was perfect, and Baltimore is one of the most beautiful and genial cities that ever enshrined a philanthropic gathering. The great opera house (for the use of which our sisters paid $1,500), the gay flags, banners and bannerettes; the toothsome hot luncheon furnished free to all delegates daily in the hall; the delightful music, carefully prepared months beforehand; the exceeding consideration and brotherly kindness of the press, never before equaled in our experience; the harmonious spirit of the delegates—not one jarring note of severity from first to last; the nearly fifty open pulpits; the presence of distinguished men and women as fraternal delegates and guests on the platform; the representation of forty-five state and territorial unions by four hundred and twenty-eight delegates; the progressive action by which 'the major-general' of the children was placed in executive committee and the L. T. L. work forwarded; the stanch loyalty 'without a dissenting voice' to the Prohibition party; the thanks to Republicans for advance ground on woman suffrage, and the Democrats for local prohibition in the South; the indorsement of the request to our Prohibition brothers to call ours the Home Protection party; the generous collections for the Armenians; the increased appropriation for the colored work; the jubilee evenings, with banner processions, and the inimitable rendering of the state songs—all these are among the features that have made our twenty-second annual 'Harvest Home' pass into the memories of all who participated in it as an unalloyed delight. Under all of its beauty and charm was a deep sense of the presence and blessing of God, never more pervasive than when Elizabeth Greenwood gave that hallowed Bible reading, 'A Voice from the Heights.' Alas, that this Christian leader was so soon to be called to her home in Brooklyn by a telegram announcing her mother's sudden illness, only to find that the precious household saint had already been translated to her home in heaven. Two other minor chords were heard in the music of the great Convention orchestra—Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, was about to start for the Convention, when her brother's illness and death detained her, and Mrs. Goodale, the intrepid leader of Louisiana, was called back to Baton Rouge by a telegram announcing the death of her niece and home-keeper. The memorial service was most impressive, tender and exalting. The tributes to our Mary T. Lathrap—that of Mrs. Benjamin being chief—brought tears to every eye, and nothing touched the hearts of the delegates and the public more than the loving references to fathers and husbands, brothers and sons from our white-ribbon households who have passed onward in the present year. Take the Convention as a whole, it was so helpful, womanly and strong that I heard on the lips of guest and host alike more frequently than I had ever heard them before, the words, 'How sorry I am that this happy time is over!'"

---

It is well known that this paper warmly indorses the utterances of John G. Woolley on behalf of the Christian citizenship movement. He is the most valiant and capable revivalist the church has ever had to arouse it from the deadly lethargy of the partisan, and his career of untold usefulness seems but begun. While all this is true, and never more so than in the present critical emergency, we have not thought it wise to participate in the present painful controversy between our Prohibition Boanerges and the founder of the great Society of Christian Endeavor. But we are by no means apathetic observers of this battle of the giants, and it is our ardent prayer that out of it may come a clarified perception of the powers of good men in the swift, sharp arbitrament of the election day, when the war-cry of the Christian patriot should be, "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

---

Mrs. William Jennings Demorest, of New York city, presented the beautiful white silk flag with a gold star for each state and territory (the National W. C. T. U. comprising them all) to the National president, at Baltimore. But it was her wish that this transfer should be made by Mrs. Katharine Willard Baldwin, as she sang Miss Kate Lunden's lovely "Star Spangled Banner of the White Ribbon Host," and Miss Willard desired Mrs. Judge Thompson to receive it. We make this explanation in reply to questions that have come to us. The flag will go next year into the custody of the state union making the greatest gain in actual memberships over that of 1895.

Miss Willard has said: "When woman is transplanted from the conservatories of seclusion into the great open garden of common life, the management of that garden must change."

Our editor-in-chief recently realized the hope of years in meeting George Macdonald, whom she calls the St. John of modern literature. Probably no writer is more loved in the homes of good people or has done more to influence the characters of the thoughtful and earnest in these days. She reports to us that in his beautiful old age, with his clear blue eyes, ruddy cheeks and halo of gray hair, and deep-toned Scotch voice, he realized her expectations as to the visible form, while his entire simplicity and childlikeness of spirit were what one would anticipate from knowing that real self which he, more than most writers, shows forth in all his books. He spoke reverently of Whittier and Emerson, and quoted from the latter a line that he said seemed to him pregnant with meaning beyond most, "The silent organ loudest chants its master's requiem."

A playful, private letter recently received, contains the following passage: "Lady Henry Somerset has gone to London to see—whom do you guess?—none other than Jane Cakebread, and she had to have a government permit to do it. You see when a woman has got to such a pitch of importance that she has been arrested two hundred and seventy-seven times, it requires no ordinary preliminary to have the honor of speaking with her in the palace of Holloway (a prison)."

Among the many definitions of happiness, there is one by Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes that has become a favorite, namely, "Happiness is four feet on a fender." The true poetry of the meaning cannot be lost on any one who thinks. Holmes liked it so much that he often referred to it, and when his beloved wife who had been his lifelong companion had left him for a better world and a dear friend came in to condole with him, he said with a shake of his good gray head, "Only two feet on the fender now," and in this utterance there was more to be read between the lines than many people give expression to in a whole lifetime.

Celia Thaxter said: "How refreshing is the sight of a birdless bonnet. The face beneath, no matter how plain it may be, seems to possess a gentle charm. She might have had birds, this woman, for they are cheap enough, heaven knows; but she has them not, therefore she must wear within, things infinitely precious, namely, good sense, good taste, good feeling. Does any woman imagine these withered corpses (cured with arsenic), which she loves to carry about, are beautiful? Not so; the birds lost their beauty with their lives."

"A woman at thirty-five," says Elizabeth B. Custer, "has enthusiasm without gush; she discriminates, and is quite sure what she likes. The abruptness of youth has given way to the softening and subduing grace of maturity. She has still passionate intensity of heart and great capability of devotion, but she has reserve, and daws do not peck at her sleeve."

The word civilization is to-day full of meaning unknown to the ancients. It does not mean religion as it did to the Hebrew, intellectual classicism as it did to the Greeks, military power as it did to the Roman, nor ascetic theology as it did in the Dark Ages. It means far more and better things. It does not mean to be carefully tended physically, like a flock of sheep, with moral and intellectual energies repressed as in the aristocratic republics of Italy; nor that only a small portion of truth be doled out as in the Theocratic governments of Asia; nor does it mean the perfect organization of the social state or civil life. If this were all, then, as Guizot suggests, the inhabitants of an ant hill or a bee hive would be most highly civilized. The development of individual life, of the human mind, the development of man himself and woman herself is the other circumstance which, together with progress in the social state, makes up the totality of nineteenth century civilization, but it has not yet come to its full splendor.

AROUND THE WORLD.

NEW ZEALAND.

A most cheering account of our work comes from New Zealand. Mrs. Hewitt and Mrs. Medley are working most indefatigably among the Maoris. The Maoris are very interested in hearing that the people of England were once as savage and uncivilized as the Maoris were when first the English came to New Zealand, and that if they would only give up the vices they have learned from us, and take to our industries instead, they, too, may become a great people. In one place where the meetings were held, a public house, which was chiefly supported by the Maoris, was closed; all have been benefited by the meetings there. One thousand temperance and other tracts in the Maoris languages have been distributed. Sometimes when Mrs. Medley has been advocating the temperance cause the Maoris have said, "Why don't you speak to the government? We do not bring the drink into the country; we do not know how to make it." She replied: "No, but you know too well how to drink it; that is why I bring this to you," and held out a pledge card and asked them to help the temperance cause by putting men into Parliament who would put down the liquor traffic and help to save their race. Branches of the W. W. C. T. U. have been formed at Wanganui and Petonie, and for the first time two Maoris will attend the next annual convention as delegates.

AUSTRALIA.

Mrs. Carvosso and others have sent encouraging accounts from Queensland with their hearty congratulations on the success of our Convention in London, and they expressed the hope that before long the Convention will meet in Queensland. They say that if this can be done the work in Australia will receive a great impetus. The Brisbane W. C. T. U. at the recent agricultural show had a temperance booth. This proved to be a most successful venture and £200 were received in small sums. The press wrote most appreciatively of this practical demonstration of the W. W. C. T. U. work and evidenced what a great boon the booth was to the general public.

AFRICA.

From Sierra Leone comes news of the terrible ravages the cheap spirits, supplied largely by Germany and England, are making on the west coast of Africa. As the bishop of Sierra Leone and the governor and his wife are teetotalers, we may shortly be able to accomplish practical work in this important region. Great interest is now being created in England by the visit of Chief Khama. It seems strange irony that he and other black chiefs have to come here to request our Christian civilized government not to force our drinking customs amongst their black population. These chiefs know that if Bechuanaland is handed over to the power of the Chartered Company, the drinking habits of the English will soon take hold of their people. They are now happy, and we hope our Colonial secretary, Mr. Chamberlain, will give on behalf of our government the assurance asked for, and leave these chiefs to continue to manage their subjects and be only responsible to our queen and not to the Chartered Company.

BRITISH NOTES.

I have recently been speaking for the Scotch Temperance League. In Scotland temperance sentiment is ahead of us in England. In Glasgow, largely through the action of the B. W. T. A., scientific temperance instruction is given in the schools every week. The B. W. T. A. also gives lectures on the subject to the board of school teachers. I long to see the time when this will be done in England; as it is, our teaching in the schools is very insufficient.

The United Kingdom Alliance meetings have just now been held in Manchester. Many of us took services in the chapels of Manchester and neighborhood on Sunday. All the meetings have been well attended.

Four thousand people met in the Free Trade Hall on October 22, at the annual public meeting, when that good, great man, the president of the United Kingdom Alliance, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, presided.

ITEMS.

Our Danish work is very difficult—the powers that be make temperance reform a most uphill task in Denmark.

Mrs. Selmer is now in Finland where she is working for us with Miss Trygg. Mrs. Selmer says, "had we not been upheld by the knowledge of the work of our W. W. C. T. U. sisters our poor little union would have died long ago."

Our Norwegian W. C. T. U. is doing capital work. The white ribbon badge is worn by all the members of the union and is becoming widely understood throughout the country.

The appointment of Miss Pemell as superintendent of the W. W. C. T. U. flower mission department, which is regarded as a national honor, has greatly rejoiced all the Australian colonies. The Australians are cosmopolitan; all nationalities are in their country. Our workers there are doing great things, their letters are most inspiring.

The U. S. A. National convention will now be over and we in England are watching eagerly for a report of the proceedings, for we feel assured we shall gain inspiration from it.

Mrs. Lovell has accepted the superintendency of the World's department of mercy. We are confidently expecting much good will result from an experienced worker as she is, spreading the usefulness of a department which has hitherto been confined to the United States.

We shall be so glad if readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will help the work of the W. W. C. T. U. by sending to me orders for the World's Minutes, for we believe nothing can help on the success of our work more than the reading of this report.

An invitation has just come from the W. C. T. U. of Victoria for the next World's W. C. T. U. to meet in Melbourne. The Victorian W. C. T. U. reminds us that Melbourne is one of the largest cities in Australia; it has also the largest number of members, and is central and within easy access of the other Colonies. Canada has also informally invited the W. W. C. T. U. The question will be decided six months hence by the general officers, who, in the meantime, much appreciate these invitations.

QUEENSLAND ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The tenth annual convention of the Queensland W. C. T. U. met in the lecture hall of the Baptist Tabernacle, Brisbane, and lasted for four days. The hall was tastefully decorated with greenery and flowers, while the many beautiful banners from unions added an interest to the bright appearance. The convention was opened by singing the Crusade hymn, and reading by officers and delegates of the Crusade psalm.

One hundred and twenty delegates answered to the roll-call, representing thirty-seven unions. The total number of unions in the Colony is now forty-eight, with a membership of one thousand eight hundred and five and three hundred and eighty-six honorary members. Among other interesting items of secretary's report was the number of unions that have taken up mothers' meetings, nine hundred and seventy-six having been held during the year. Some country unions make a specialty of gaining the interest of young women, who gladly attend, and would not otherwise know anything of the important questions taught there. A Somerset Y union has been formed for girls living in the scattered districts of Queensland. Mrs. Carvosso, Y organizer, who carries on this work by the aid of the Young Women and other literature, has received many letters from girls in all parts of Queensland asking for more information; this bright idea must be the means of introducing the white ribbon to many remote districts.

The Queensland W. C. T. U. exhibit to the Tasmanian exhibition, consisting of banners, photos, etc., was an object lesson in temperance; a large parcel of literature was also sent for distribution. The subject of headquarters has been taken up warmly by most of the unions who have raised funds by fairs and entertainments. So that the account now stands at £128.

Mrs. Brentnall in her presidential address said: "Ten years ago a few unions met to hold their first convention wondering how to fill up two days' sittings. In taking a retrospect we should sing of mercy and praise to our loving Father for all the way He has brought us." Mrs. Brentnall also spoke to the Y's of their many privileges, and reviewed temperance work all over the world during the year, giving an account of the great international meetings of the W. W. C. T. U. in London.

Mrs. E. B. Harris strongly recommended all present to take "Thumb Nail Sketches" and become acquainted with our leaders during their lives. Mrs. Payne has wonderfully worked up our literature department. Beginning with a few leaflets, there is now in stock and ordered from America £85 worth of first-class literature; £50 has been spent on libraries and thousands of leaflets distributed by the unions. Mrs. and Miss Payne were given a rising vote of thanks, on retiring from this work, and at close of convention the Colonial executive presented Mrs. Payne with a gold brooch, W. C. T. U. in pearls, as a token of love for her self-sacrificing work in making this the important department in every union.

At the Y conference all the bright young people enjoyed a talk on the best means of carrying on their work. Most interesting and well written papers on choice of literature and narcotics were given, with discussions on how to help factory girls, active work for our honoraries, etc. A vote was taken as to whether a Y conference should be held in convention next year and decided affirmatively, which shows the Y's are more courageous every year.

White ribbon testimonies were given by many who thanked God for bringing them the W. C. T. U., for in trying to bless others they were blessed, and brought out into "a larger place."

A white ribbon birthday book was given Mrs. Brentnall on her birthday, the 18th, when she was received with the Chautauqua salute, for Queensland's beloved president lives very near to the hearts and lives of all her women. At the close of convention, on her reëlection as Colonial president, there was a scene of the greatest enthusiasm, and beautiful white bouquets were sent her from the women and the Y's. Our untiring corresponding secretary, Mrs. Carvosso, Miss McLean, recording secretary, and Mrs. Bryce, treasurer, were also reëlected.

A happy introduction was made to the convention of two baby honorary members, on whom Mrs. Brentnall tied the white ribbon amidst much merriment.

Three public meetings were held on evenings, a reception to delegates and friends, a W and Y evening and a Loyal Temperance Legion demonstration. These L. T. L's now have a membership of over one thousand children who receive thorough training in their sixfold pledge.

A clever and most interesting paper was read by Miss Jordan, delegate from Honolulu, on the people and their customs of that "garden of the sea," and also of the W. C. T. U. work among them and the white people.

The spirit of unity and concord that pervaded the convention struck all who came to listen, as also the thoroughly business-like and quiet manner in which everything was managed, all present living up to their grand motto, "For God, Home and Humanity."

NEWS LETTER.

The enfranchisement of women, which is a cause dear to our union, has during the last month suffered a defeat. In the early part of August a Constitution Amendment Acts Bill was brought before the House of Assembly, when on the motion of the attorney general, the word "man" in section 3 was struck out, and the words "male and female" inserted. This amendment, which extended the franchise to women, was passed by the splendid majority of 22 to 5 for House of Assembly, and 24 to 8 for Legislative Council. The bill passed through its third reading safely. But, alas, when it came under the scrutiny of the Legislative Council on September 4, it did not meet with the same favor. Unfortunately, the Constitution Amendment Acts Bill was considered by the honorable members to be an unnecessary one. Not solely because one of its sections gave women a vote, but for several other reasons, one of these being the reduction of the qualification of voters. The bill found 5 for and 10 against it. This seeming failure has not daunted our women and their coworkers. We are convinced that when the subject is again brought before both houses it will meet with greater favor.

There has been much indignation lately in Hobart, the capital city, owing to statements made in several newspapers regarding the morality of young girls. A brother drew attention to these statements in the House of Assembly, and said that 'the first step would be to find out the men who were ruining the lives of so many young girls." The premier S. E. Braddon, stated that the attorney general had given notice to introduce a bill which would aim at remedying the evil. The W. C. T. U. of Hobart held a big praise purity meeting on September 5, with the object of arousing interest and indignation. Our colonial superintendent of purity secured a large number of speakers. There was a large and representative gathering, among whom were Drs. Crowthers and Gibson, and most of the ministers. There is a general feeling of resentment against the inefficiency of our laws for protecting children and girls of tender years. Our women are not going to let this matter drop and I hope to be able to record that some good has been done.

GOOD NEWS FROM JAPAN.

Temperance work is growing well. Mr. Taro Ando, in Tokyo, and Mr. Hayashi, of Yokohama, are vital workers with their followers. They work for Japan and humanity. In the lady's department or W. C. T. U. Mrs. Yajima is taking much thought for the development of the work.

I met Mrs. Joseph Cook a few days ago and she is now working in Maribashi, where Miss H. F. Parmelee is working brightly. We expect to hear Mr. Joseph Cook in November, as he will then come from Australia. The temperance work will be renewed by his words wonderful.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

THE Quebec Provincial convention at Lachute last month was an evidence of the progress being made under Mrs. Sanderson's wise supervision. Canadian women are earnest workers, and are falling into line with the many departments of the mother union.

THE White Ribbon Temperance Lessons have been printed in Roman-Urdu, in the Star of India, published weekly at Lucknow. They are now appearing in Urdu and in Hindi, in the two editions of the Woman's Friend, issued from the Methodist Publishing House, Lucknow, every fortnight.

MRS. MARY M. SCOTT, editor of the Canadian W. C. T. U. organ, the Woman's Journal, sent greetings to the National W. C. T. U. gathering at Baltimore, saying: "Down in our French Canadian Province of Quebec, in the springtime, the farmers know when it is time to sow their grain by the singing of the little Canadian rossignal, perched upon the branches of the tree, which pipes out, 'Sim, sim, ton blé' (Sow, sow thy wheat). We will sing to you, we will not only rejoice in your seed sowing, but hover around in the gathering harvest of your annual Convention, cheering and encouraging your work."

SHO NEMOTO sends THE UNION SIGNAL a translation of the letter addressed by the Chinese peace envoy, Li Hung Chang, to the skilled Japanese physician, Dr. Sato, who cured the face wound inflicted upon the Chinese statesman during his mission at the close of the China-Japan war. Li Hung closes his tribute to the remarkable skill of the physician in these words which augur well for the coming of the good time. "I pray for peace in all countries, for universal peace, and for the blessings that attend it. For a long time to come I hope there may be no wounds, not only on my personal account but for the well-being of all."

MISS MARY ROBINSON and Mrs. Lucy Hoag, missionary white-ribboners from China, who have been in the United States since May, visited Headquarters October 22, en route to San Francisco and their posts in the Celestial land. Miss Robinson talked interestingly of the enthusiasm of her band of forty students in Chin Kiang, who on her departure presented her with a silver white ribbon pin with the C. E. monogram pendant, and fastened white ribbon bows upon her gowns ready for use. These young Chinese students were greatly interested in the opium inquiry and pray constantly that the opium as well as the liquor traffic may be banished from their land.

NEW JERSEY.

WAVING WHITE RIBBONS.

The twenty-second annual convention of the W. C. T. U., of New Jersey, was held in Paterson, October 8, 9, 10 and 11. The auditorium was tastefully decorated, banners and white ribbon amid flowers and palms were prominently displayed. About three hundred delegates received a hearty address of welcome from Mrs. Austin, president of Passaic county, and the pastor of the church. Other clergymen spoke in humorous vein, and received frequent applause. Mrs. Gilbert of Vineland, responded on behalf of the delegates and spoke stirringly of the work of the organization, its needs and prospects. After brief remarks by Miss More, of Newton, the orator of the evening, John G. Woolley, was introduced, and during the hour of his address the interest of listeners never flagged; the church was filled to the doors and standing room was at a premium.

The real work of the convention began on the 9th. Mrs. Mary Denman, of Newark, led the devotions; in 1874 she organized the state union and was the first president, and for most part at her own expense, has pushed the work not only into every county of New Jersey but into many other states, till she was succeeded by Mrs. Downs some years since. Other warriors of that early date of the Crusade against intemperance were present.

Next in order was the annual address of the president, Mrs. Emma Bourne. She indorsed the formation of Christian citizenship unions in the churches to work for the enforcement of the laws against vice, for a pure ballot, for the prosecution of unprincipled public officials, and for protection from corporate greed! She recommended that we W's pay more attention to the colored race and believes that the white people will be held responsible for their continued ignorance. She made suggestions for improved methods and exhorted each to renew her efforts in the great cause of reform.

Mrs. N. L. Caminade, of Trenton, read the annual report as state treasurer, showing that during the year ending October 1, $3,103.07 had been received, which, with the balance of $277.88 from the previous year, gave the organization $3,380.95 to defray the expenses of the year. Only $2,875.87 had been used, however, leaving a balance in the treasury. The total membership of the state, calculated upon the amount of money received for dues, was 6,248.

During the year there has been an increase of 127 members. Mrs. Margaret Ellis, state corresponding secretary, reported that during the year 4,029 W. C. T. U. meetings had been held, beside 2,280 public meetings. Twelve libraries and nine reading rooms exist, under the supervision of the unions. Books and furniture to the value of $2,195 are owned by them. Eighteen halls, valued at $128,912.10 are owned by New Jersey unions. In the state $36,354.45 has been raised for the work, and $30,240.71 expended. Thirteen life members have joined during the year. The banner for the largest percentage of increase by membership of a county was awarded to Ocean county. Mrs. Campfield, of Newark, superintendent of temperance work at state fairs, reported good work at Rest Cottage. An earnest woman of Newark edited a daily paper at Waverly fair grounds, and the women circulated three thousand each day of the fair to the crowd from all parts of the state. Who can sum the amount of good done by this silent enterprise? And Rest Cottage is at last our very own.

Miss Campbell, of New Brunswick, presided at the meeting held in the evening by the Y's. She said a speaker from abroad had disappointed the committee in not being able to attend, but that they intended to show the people of Paterson that the daughters of New Jersey could furnish an excellent entertainment even when left to the eleventh hour.

The president of the Christian Endeavor society and the president of the Passaic county Epworth League society welcomed the delegates in behalf of those organizations.

Miss Campbell said there were twenty-one unions of young women in the state with a total membership of 510. There were 186 young men honorary members, and $2,453.53 was the available funds on hand. She advocated the pushing of the work in new places. These were the days of rapid transit. She believed the watchword of the W. C. T. U. should be "'Organize," and if every young woman in the land were a member and lived up to its principles, intemperance in man would soon be obliterated. "It is time the book of resolutions was changed to the book of acts."

A pleasant episode of the evening was the presentation of the banner from one union to another. This year the Roseville Y's won the laurels, having the largest percentage of increase in membership.

The reports of superintendents of departments were all good and showed that work had been done in all departments taken up by our state, much more than is recorded. Time and space forbid that I should enter into particulars.

The crowning event of this convention was the thrilling address of Dr. Leonard (on the last evening); his subject was the "Relation of the Church to Temperance." He said, "I have no confidence in the fitness of a preacher for the ministry who never can find time to preach on temperance."

Mrs. Leonard, wife of the celebrated divine, presented the convention with a gavel made from wood of the Crusade church.

Mrs. Rice, of Boston, gave an address to the children of the L. T. L. during convention. The new song adopted by the state union was sung by its representatives at the National Convention.

COLORADO.

GLEANINGS.

After a most delightful summer at the sea coast I find myself at home, and it is with great pleasure that I read the reports from local unions. There has been unabated activity during the months when so many were seeking rest, and thus the "members who stayed at home" deserve honorable mention.

Arapahoe county, with its ten unions, has sustained its mission, and daily, from ten to twelve o'clock in the morning, its doors have been open to those who sought rest and help within its walls. Distribution of food and clothing are two of the essentials of this work, but preceding this, a service of prayer and praise, with appropriate Scripture lessons, is held, while on Saturday an L. T. L. of over one hundred members can be heard singing the songs and repeating the pledge which promises so much for our children of to-day, the coming voters. No approximate value can be placed on these teachings, and, unlike the public school, our mission takes no vacation.

Another line of work which has been successfully carried on by the Brainard union is that of flower distribution at the county hospital and county jail. Since the latter part of May over four thousand bouquets have been thus distributed, said flowers being a gift to the union from the King's Daughters of Golden, Col.

Loving hearts have gained for themselves a blessing as with kindly word and cheerful face they have gone out and in among these people. Sick and lonely or discouraged and erring ones have been made to feel that "somebody cares."

A union evangelistic service has been held at the state headquarters the second Tuesday in each month since the last county convention. Unquestionably helpful do these prove to those privileged to attend, and fresh strength is gathered as our lives touch in this union service.

For the year closing September 1, the county unions report progress, some having gained in membership while all have done creditably along the line of finances. Certainly, with the hope of more prosperous times the new year of our work opens before us with abundant promise.

From Grand Junction, Trinidad, Aspen, Rocky Ford, Eaton and Canon City, the cheerful tidings of good work done comes as an inspiration to continued activity.

Varied plans for raising money have been tried and many carried to a successful issue. Unique socials, suppers and picnics have aided in replenishing the treasury, at the same time uniting the hearts of the workers.

The department work varies in the different unions; but prominent in all comes "mothers' work" with its widening influence, while in many places the L. T. L., medal contest and maintenance of a reading-room are reported. Trinidad has secured for its union a home, or headquarters, which was donated by a generous citizen, and with comfortable furnishings has been dedicated to the work.

May the coming winter witness advance along all lines, and may every wearer of the ribbon white feel a personal interest and responsibility in this matter.

"With purpose strong and steady in the great Jehovah's name,
We rise to snatch our kindred from the depths of woe and shame.
With Almighty hands to help us, we have faith to do and dare,
While confiding in the promise that the Lord will answer prayer."

NEVADA.

WHITE-RIBBONERS IN SESSION.

The tenth annual convention of the Nevada state W. C. T. U. met in Virginia City, October 2 and 3. Though few in number the members were strong in spirit and determination to push the work as much as possible, and, though no one but our own state workers were with us, we felt the uplift that comes from meeting with those of kindred thought and work.

The difficulties of our work are so many and so hard to overcome that we sometimes get discouraged, but we always feel that though few and far between our unions are holding aloft the temperance banner, and that the simple presence of our white-ribboners is a continual protest against evil even though no aggressive work be done.

We were glad when our president informed us that we have a state tablet in Willard Hall, and hope to do a little more for our "House Beautiful" before '96.

To our great regret our loved and very efficient president, Mrs. L. M. Van Deventer, positively declined reëlection. We hope that by another year her health will be such that she can again take up the office for which she is so well fitted.

Our officers for the ensuing year are: President, Dr. Eliza Cook, Sheridan; recording secretary, Mrs. L. M. Westlake, Reno; corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. G. Nash, Carson; treasurer, Mrs. R. J. Crawford, Reno.

The Presbyterian and Methodist ministers were exceedingly kind to us, aiding us by words of encouragement and speaking in the evening.

We hold in grateful remembrance the choir and other singers for the beautiful songs sung at our evening session.

The members of the Virginia union provided for our comfort and convenience and made us so welcome that we hope to go there again.

DR. ELIZA COOK,
State President.

IF any present at the Convention had harbored fears concerning the health and vigor of the National President, those fears took speedy flight. Never did she seem so alert, so forceful, so resourceful. It may be that the outline of her features has lost some of its former curve, but there is no sign of relaxation in the strong determination of lip and brow; no tremor in the winsome smile, so well known to those who have watched its play these many years; no note of failure or faltering in the strong, sweet voice; no abatement in the flash of wit or stroke of logic, and not one whit less determination in the down-come of the order-calling gavel in her strong right hand!

MISS WILLARD, Mrs. Ormiston Chant and Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, spoke at the Woman's College, Baltimore, and as a result a Y society was formed by the kind permission of Dr. John Goucher, founder of the college. It has nine buildings, four hundred students and is one of the most complete and perfectly appointed colleges in the United States.

MISS CARRIE LEE CARTER, one of our Y organizers, said in her report at National Convention: "Speaking of growth and progress, Missouri can claim what no other state can claim, and that is a woman sheriff; this means not that all women in Missouri want to be sheriffs, but that the women of that state can now enjoy the privilege of being hanged by one of their own sex!"

MOTHER THOMPSON'S peaceful face, whose fine lines are eloquent of battles fought and won, was a continual benediction at the National Convention as she sat quietly among the busy workers who thronged the platform. The passing of years holds her, it may be, in physical durance, but her ear was quick to hear, her lips ready to smile, her eyes to flash or moisten and her hands to applaud as she listened, session after session, to report, speech and song, each bearing on the one theme of temperance and purity in heart and home and country.

THE following message was sent by Josiah W. Leeds to Miss Willard at Baltimore, uniting with her proposition that the Prohibition party be henceforth known by the title, better and more positively expressive of its purposes, the party of Home Protection: "I heartily approve of the recommendation of the title, Home Protection, for the party that is in opposition to the liquor saloon and its sinister brood: that I have myself used it preferably to the negative and but imperfectly expressive word, 'Prohibition,' for several years past, and that I think the present an appropriate time to have brought it forward for formal adoption. I trust that our brothers who are waging the warfare of the ballots, recognizing the fact that our pure cause, politically expressed, stands for High Principles on an Honest Platform, not one of the planks of which shall be a meaningless platitude immediately after election, will both kindly receive and consent to adopt the name that so well fits and describes it—the party of Home Protection."

THE pleasure excursion to the national capitol following the Convention, comprised twelve carloads of white-ribboners who were met by members of the Washington unions with 'buses and carriages innumerable and guides. The capitol, the National Museum, and the Bureau of Printing and Engraving were first visited. They found the method of making bank notes very interesting, and saw the revenue tags for liquors and snuff in process of printing, much to their edification. A tour through the parlors of the White House, and a few moments in the Corcoran Art Gallery, ended the morning sight-seeing. After a drive through many beautiful streets, passing the Washington monument and many famous buildings, the delegates reached the Calvary Baptist church, where luncheon was served, appreciation of which was manifested by a hearty vote of thanks. By steamboat to Mount Vernon was the next move. After inspecting the rooms, spinning-house and garden, and investing in numerous hatchets and gavels made from cherry trees on the place, the white-ribbon visitors stopped at the tomb of George and Martha Washington where a little service was held—singing and prayer and a short and inspiring address by Mrs. Margaret Ellis, of New Jersey. The potency of the white ribbon as "a family tie" was never more evident, for none but those near and dear would have taken the trouble and pains as did the Washington women to make the trip enjoyable and perfect.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

DEAR SISTERS:—Once again through the suffrages of your representatives, I find myself honored by being called to serve you for another year. That I esteem it an honor goes without saying; that I esteem it a privilege, should also be a self-evident proposition. The very fact that you have called me to this place is proof that you believe I will serve your best interests while in it. That, in itself, is an honor beyond words, before which I bow in loving gratitude. I can truthfully say that, in one sense, I accept the position with greater reluctance than when called to it last year. I have learned more fully what are its requirements and feel a greater doubt as to my own ability to measure up to those requirements. The ideal National corresponding secretary, as she exists in my thought today, is a much larger type of woman than was the ideal of a year ago; because it is only as one puts herself into any place that she can realize what are the duties, the responsibilities and the requirements of that place.

But while this is true on the one hand, it is also true on the other, that I enter upon this year with greater gladness and a fuller assurance of success. I learned many lessons last year, but the lesson above all others which sank into my heart and which abides with me to-day, is that white-ribboners are swift to recognize the motive and to respond in help and sympathy to what one tries to do. Believing this, I have no fear since I am sure your prayers will rise for me and your swift hands will strive to execute whatsoever we shall ask you to do. Best of all I know you will cover mistakes with the mantle of your beautiful charity and help me by your love, by your wise counsel, by your reproof, if need be, to better realize the ideal of service.

I wish there were space in this column to write about the wonderful Convention just closed, but the other papers have been so filled with it that I must forbear. God was with us and we found gladness and strength in Him. It was good to see how Miss Willard stood the strain of those busy days, and how well she seemed, even at the close. Surely God has been better than all our fears in thus restoring to us our great leader. To Him be the glory!

I had hoped in this number to give some of the plans for the ensuing year, but upon me has devolved the pleasant duty of going, together with Mrs. Beauchamp and Mrs. Nichols, to Atlanta for our W. C. T. U. Day there, November 5. I am writing these notes from the heart of the Nation's life, and in that safe shelter for weary white-ribboners, La Fetra's Hotel. I shall return to Chicago immediately from Atlanta, where there will be a majority of the general officers, and the plans for increasing membership, etc., will be formulated.

I have taken two mottoes for my own this year—the first, that of last year—"Ask largely"—the second—"Love hopeth all things." I am sure we do not let Hope have her perfect way in our work. I wish you would all enter into a covenant with me that this year we will see the bright side only, and will let no discouraging or disparaging word fall from our lips. Oh, the heights of victory we should scale if thus we climbed with God!

Yours in hope,

RESOLUTIONS PASSED BY THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

PREAMBLE.

Recognizing in the year that is gone the good hand of our God upon us, leading us into new truth, opening before us new doors of opportunity, stirring us to deeper devotion, beckoning some of our numbers to higher service, and touching other lives with the blessed ordination to take their places and carry on their work, we, the members of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in convention assembled, would hereby renew our covenant vows of loyalty to God, and Home and Native Land, and resolve, by His grace, that we will take no backward step in the year before us, but that, standing firmly by our principles, we will endeavor to go steadily forward in loving dependence upon God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

Resolved, That we reaffirm our belief in the pledge as an expression of definite committal to the cause of total abstinence, and as an educator of public sentiment.

Resolved, That we have learned, with great satisfaction, of the added testimony from eminent specialists in science, given at the recent International Congress across the water, as to the hurtful effects of the moderate use of alcohol, and its fearful power as the producing cause of insanity and physical degeneracy.

EVANGELISTIC.

Resolved, That in view of the sweet and helpful influence of our devotional services, we anew set our seal upon them, and recommend the same to our state and county conventions.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the growing interest manifested in the noon meetings at Willard Hall, and pray that the gracious influence may spread until every large city in our land shall sustain a noon prayer-meeting, under white ribbon auspices, for the salvation of souls and the glory of God.

THE GOVERNMENT VS. THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Resolved, That we deplore the attitude of the national government towards the liquor traffic, and trust the time is not far distant when the Christian nation will refuse to enrich her treasury at the expense of the mental, physical and moral well-being of the people: and to this end we once more declare ourselves opposed to the legalized saloon, and in favor of prohibitory laws against the manufacture, importation and sale of alcoholic beverages in state and nation.

WHEREAS, The cause of temperance is best served by the protection of the home against all its foes, and we believe poverty and ignorance to be causes as well as effects of intemperance: and

WHEREAS, An effort to secure the political union of the reform forces of the nation against the allied evils of injustice and intemperance has resulted in the acceptance by large numbers of earnest men and women in various parts of the country of what is known as the Staten Island basis of union; therefore,

Resolved, That the object of such efforts is one that we most earnestly endorse, and we hereby recommend that basis as one upon which the reform forces of the nation may honorably and worthily unite for the campaign of 1896.

PROHIBITION.

While we heartily approve of the "Do Everything policy" of the W. C. T. U., we recognize the fact that we were organized to push total abstinence and prohibition, and we reaffirm our allegiance, not only to these principles, but also to the Prohibition party, as the only political party with the courage to speak out boldly in favor of woman suffrage and the total annihilation of the liquor traffic.

HOME PROTECTION.

Resolved, That we ask our brothers of the Prohibition party, beside whom we hope to stand ere long as voters at the polls, to heed our earnest request, repeated for so many years through our publications and addresses, and to adopt the name prayed for by their most loyal and devoted allies, and call ours the Home Protection Party.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Resolved, That we reaffirm our former utterances regarding the sanctity of the Sabbath, and pledge ourselves anew to keep it holy, as the Lord hath commanded, and to do all in our power to secure for all people rest and the opportunity to worship God in His sanctuary upon the day which He has blest and sanctified.

Resolved, That we rejoice that Atlanta has honored God by closing the gates of its exposition on the Sabbath day.

WHEREAS, We hear with sorrow that the post-office established in this building for the accommodation of delegates was open four and one-half hours upon the Sabbath for the delivery of letters, thereby entailing unnecessary work upon the clerk and depriving him of the rest to which every man is entitled, therefore,

Resolved, That we deprecate the act as inconsistent with the attitude of the W. C. T. U. upon the question of Sabbath observance, and pledge ourselves that it shall not again occur.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the organization of a woman's National society to secure better Sabbath observance, and we extend to that society a hand of welcome and a cordial word of cheer.

UNFERMENTED WINE.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the advance made by various religious denominations in their use of the unfermented wine at the sacramental table.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION.

WHEREAS, We believe that universal scientific education in our public schools is a great factor in temperance reform, therefore, we rejoice that by the acts of state and national legislatures this branch is made a mandatory study for all pupils in the public schools in forty-one states, and in all the territories, and in other schools under federal control, including fully 16,000,000 children of school age in our land, and we urge upon school boards, teachers and all educational authorities the faithful enforcement of these laws.

WHEREAS, The few opponents to this educational movement for the enlightenment of the young concerning the nature and effect of alcoholic drinks and narcotics upon the human system have, by insinuation or otherwise, attempted to injure the same by the intimation or assertion that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the National superintendent are pecuniarily interested in the enactment and enforcement of these laws.

Resolved, That we positively affirm that no money, royalty or other consideration has ever been paid to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union or Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the National superintendent of this department, or the advisory board of the same for the endorsement or seal of any school physiology.

DEPARTMENT OF MERCY.

Resolved, That we earnestly request educators of all schools throughout the country to devote at least ten minutes of each week in the school year to the teaching of kindness to the lower animals, availing themselves of reading, lessons, or other opportunities; and we also earnestly request that they will refrain from all demonstrations on the bodies of living animals in giving physiology lessons, as we believe such demonstration to have a demoralizing tendency.

Resolved, That we severely condemn the cruelties practiced in what are known as bird-shooting tournaments; and it is our opinion that such brutalities should receive the strong denunciation of the public press.

PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART.

Resolved (1), That the aim of the work for the promotion of purity in literature and art is not to reform impurity but to preserve purity; therefore, we recommend the W. T. P. A. publications and the advanced courses in the C. L. S. C. upon these subjects.

Resolved (2), That we believe the newspaper is a powerful agency for the prevention of crime and impurity; therefore, we rejoice in the position taken by the Editorial Associations of several of our states, and of the National.

Resolved (3), That we appreciate the co-operation of the American News Company and railroad superintendents in our endeavor to keep the news stands and agencies clear of objectionable matter.

Resolved, That we urge upon women to work for more rigid enforcement of the laws we have relating to the literature allowed on news-stands, steamboats and railroads and in public libraries, mail matter, etc.; that we work for legislation to prohibit the public exhibition of the female form in a nude or semi-nude condition, to suppress pictures of such from bill boards and posters, also that we increase our vigilance in having objectionable pictures removed from, and that they shall not hereafter be admitted to our art galleries.

NARCOTICS.

In view of the fact that the use of narcotics is increasing with alarming rapidity in our country, we wish to voice our earnest warning against the use of chloral, bromides and other insidious remedies, which often lead directly to the formation of the opium habit.

We also urge the organization of Anti Nicotine Leagues and active work against the use of tobacco in all its forms.

WORK AMONG COLORED PEOPLE.

Resolved, That we do most heartily pledge our upport and sympathy to the workers in this department, and recommend that, in organizing unions, the co-operation of our colored sisters is urged, and we invite them to unite more heartily with us in raising a higher standard of purity for the home and the nation.

FRANCHISE.

Believing that franchise for woman is a measure of simple justice; and further, that the ballot in the hands of woman will hasten the overthrow of the liquor traffic and many other evils. Therefore,

Resolved, That we will never cease to work for suffrage and we believe in an educational limit for both sexes.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

Resolved, That the sacrifice of life by the cruelties of war is contrary to reason, an insult to nineteenth century intelligence and a travesty on Christianity, that arbitration recognizes an equality of peoples, encourages the growth of mutual interests which may not be measured by commerce only, cultivates a true personal liberty and corrects a spurious patriotism based upon unjust arguments.

MILITARY DRILL.

Believing that bullets and bayonets are weapons of savagery, and that a liberal, comprehensive education are with ballots the ammunition of peace.

Therefore, we earnestly protest against the introduction of military drill in our public schools and favor the introduction of systematic physical and moral training, which shall develop in our children the type of patriotism which seeks the greatest good of the nation in times of peace.

We also protest against the formation of cadet clubs in our churches and Sunday-schools.

PURITY.

WHEREAS, We believe God is no respecter of persons,

Resolved, That we hereby affirm our adherence to the single moral standard for both men and women, and we rejoice in the increase of White Cross and White Shield societies, which work for a higher, nobler manhood and womanhood.

WHEREAS, We recognize that correct instruction is the best safeguard of purity.

Resolved, That we will more earnestly than ever before advocate the study of scientific child training and the fitting of parents to be the safe instructors of their children.

Resolved, That we heartily rejoice in the great public awakening on the subject of purity as shown in the raising of the age of consent in many states and that we believe it to be the duty of all good men and women to use their most earnest efforts to secure in each state that legislation which shall grant adequate protection to girlhood in our land.

Resolved, That we express our gratitude to Charles N. Crittenton for his willingness to cooperate with the W. C. T. U. in the establishing of Florence Rescue Homes for erring women and we trust the time is near at hand when a safe home can be offered to every erring girl who is willing to return to a life of virtue.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION.

Resolved, That we regard the W. T. P. A. as the most important of our affiliated interests; therefore entitled to our hearty co-operation in the effort to extend its work. THE UNION SIGNAL not only takes front rank as a journal, but is also a fearless exponent of the principles of the W. C. T. U., and a most important factor in the education and enlightenment of its workers; therefore it should be in the home of every white ribbon woman.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE.

Resolved, That as this is, in a special sense, a crucial year in the Temple enterprise, we earnestly appeal to all white ribbon women to pledge themselves to help, to the best of their ability, by appeals to others and by personal gifts to raise the necessary funds to secure all the outstanding stock of the Temple Building Association by the 1st of January, 1896.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

WHEREAS, The National Temperance Hospital stands for the demonstration of a principle, viz, non-alcoholic medication.

Resolved, That we pledge our continued financial support and individual influence for the promotion of this important branch of our temperance work.

DIVORCE.

Resolved, That the question of divorce is of equal importance to men and women, and we believe that, to insure justice, women should have a place and voice in the commissions appointed by the several states to consider the divorce law.

ARMENIA.

Resolved, That we recognize no limiting sea or mountain chain in the outflow of our sympathies toward all who suffer. The measureless sorrows of old Armenia, the cradle of our race, have deeply touched our hearts, and we call upon our national government to make itself strongly felt in the diplomatic counsels which, as we rejoice to believe, are now full of promise for the relief of Armenia from the iron heel of Turkish barbarism.

PROTECTION OF WOMEN.

Resolved, That the awful outrages of which women in our country are the daily victims, and to which even little girls are subject, are the shame of our boasted civilization, and that we hereby solemnly resolve to use the utmost power that we possess as an organization to build up such a public sentiment and to secure the enactment of such laws as shall protect the most peaceful and law abiding classes of the nation, and these are its women and children.

LYNCHING.

Resolved, That white ribbon women who wear the badge of peace, ought never to have been placed in the position of having to defend themselves from the charge that they favored the lynching of any human being, anywhere, under any circumstances; and we keenly feel the false position in which we have been placed, and repudiate any imputation inconsistent with the law of Christ, which, as everybody knows, is totally at variance with the torture or killing of any human being without opportunity to have his case fairly presented and to be tried by a jury. We do not multiply epithets on this subject, because it is not necessary. We leave that to those who have misrepresented our position; but we have never hesitated, and do not now, to place ourselves squarely on record in regard to lynching and other lawless proceedings in our own or any other country, now and always, and we believe that when women have a share in making laws such atrocities will disappear from the face of the earth.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES.

Resolved, That we greatly rejoice in the continued usefulness of the young people's societies of the church, and are especially grateful to God for the strong position taken by the United Societies of Christian Endeavor and by other young people's societies in favor of temperance and good citizenship.

ELLIS ISLAND.

As it has been urgently brought to our attention that the officials at Ellis Island desire our help and influence to secure a prevention of the ships landing their passengers on Sunday and thereby making it uniformly the hardest day of the week. Therefore,

Resolved, That we protest against this official desecration of the Sabbath.

Resolved, That this Convention as a Christian body earnestly protests against the re-establishment and perpetuation of the liquor saloon at Ellis Island under the care and protection of the United States government.

HARVEY.

Resolved, That our warmest sympathies are with the loyal-hearted white-ribboners of the town of Harvey, Ill., founded on temperance principles, but which has been betrayed into the hands of the liquor power by the action of its municipal officers, and later by a small majority of its citizens, and that we believe that the principles of honor and fair dealing have been so grossly violated by these acts that they should form a test case to be carried, if need be, to the highest courts, that we may know whether corporations can set aside the provision made in deeds for the perpetual exclusion of saloons from designated lots of ground.

LECTURE BUREAU.

Resolved, That we realize the power of public speech in the advocac, of any good cause, and heartily commend the organization of a lecture bureau under the control of the general officers.

DEMOREST MEMORIAL MEDAL.

Resolved, That we express to the family of our lamented friend, William Jennings Demorest, our appreciation of their generous continuance of the medal contest work, and are glad it has the name of the Demorest Memorial Medal Contest.

CHAUTAUQUA.

Resolved, That this convention authorize a letter of appreciation to Bishop Vincent for his kind invitation for a White-ribbon Day at Chautauqua, which we most gratefully accept and inasmuch as all the leading Chautauquas and many other summer assemblies have given us the warmest welcome and accorded us large place in their programs we hereby recognize their appreciative courtesy.

TEMPERANCE UNIVERSITY.

WHEREAS, The American Temperance University of Harriman, Tenn., is the first and only educational institution in the country founded upon and dedicated to the temperance idea for the training of students for leadership in the anti-liquor forces and along all civic lines and,

WHEREAS, As said institution has on its board of trustees and in its faculty some of the ablest temperance men and women of the nation, and has three distinct professorships bearing upon temperance work; and

WHEREAS, The board has already well in hand the "Mary T. Lathrap" Chapel in honor of the great white-ribbon leader, who up to the time of her death, was a member of said board; and

WHEREAS, The board of control has generously extended to each state W. C. T. U. two free scholarships in the literary course of the university; therefore

Resolved, That we recognize said American Temperance University as worthy of confidence and support, and hereby commend it to the state and local unions throughout the country.

FRATERNAL RELATIONS.

Resolved, That Catholic women and Hebrew women should be invited to send fraternal delegates from their annual conventions to ours, and to establish branches of the White Ribbon Society within their own borders.

Resolved, That we extend our hearty sympathy to our brothers of the National Reform Association, whose efforts are parallel to ours on many lines.

Resolved, That we extend to Theodore Roosevelt our hearty thanks for his bravery in standing for the rigid enforcement of law, and demonstrating that the saloons can be closed on the Sabbath in New York city; and we also express our appreciation of the action of Governor Culberson, of Texas, in preventing the disgrace of a prize-fight in that commonwealth.

Resolved, That we recognize with gratitude the various legislative acts of the past year, by means of which the principles we advocate and for which we have long petitioned have been endorsed and that we extend our heartiest thanks to the political parties under whose rule in the various states such legislation has been secured.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

Resolved, That we sympathize with men and women wage workers in every lawful effort to better their own condition; that we believe in the principle of the living wage; that differences between capital and labor should be arbitrated by boards on which both are equally represented; also

Resolved, That we heartily appreciate the favorable attitude of the Labor party toward the rights of women, and hope that we may be able to find a basis of union in the next presidential campaign by the insertion of prohibition in their platform, which agrees in so many particulars with our own.

Believing as we do that intemperance is the enemy of the laboring man, especially of the sober workman, we heartily approve the action of those corporations that refuse to employ drinking men.

TEMPERANCE SUNDAY.

WHEREAS, An effort is being made by the Sunday-school department of the National W. C. T. U. in co-operation with the London Sunday-school union and other leading Sunday-school workers to establish the fourth Sunday in November as the annual Temperance Sunday to be universally observed, and

WHEREAS, The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, and state conferences of many other denominations, have favored the plan, therefore,

Resolved, That the National W. C. T. U. respectfully call the attention of churches of all denominations to this movement, and urge the universal adoption of the plan.

SYMPATHY AND APPRECIATION.

Resolved, That the National W. C. T. U. extend loving sympathy and appreciation to the families of those whom we have held dear and necessary to our work, who have this past year heard the Master say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

WHEREAS, The record shows the Queen of Madagascar to be a Christian ruler, loyal to the Bible, to the Sabbath and to temperance, we regard her as especially entitled to the sympathy of all Christian nations in her present troubles, and we earnestly hope that the difficulties between her government and the French may be settled by peaceful arbitration.

It gives us pleasure to express while our friends are yet with us our gratitude to the Almighty Father for His rich blessings upon them, and through them to the world. Therefore, we make glad mention of the sweet presence with us of Mother Thompson, and rejoice in the strong and loving comradeship of Lady Henry Somerset, and we heartily appreciate the great labors of Mrs. Rebecca Shuman in the work of preparing the Polyglot Petition, and we speed with especial prayer our round-the-world missionaries in their "sacred embassy" to the nations, and we hold in tender petition to the heart of "infinite love," our dear Mrs. Youmans, on her bed of pain, and our Mother Stewart, who is gently "gliding down the stream of time."

We thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift, for our beloved and honored president, Frances E. Willard, and we will pray that she and her loyal helper, our beloved Anna Gordon, may long be spared to us and the work for which they have so nobly wrought.

Resolved, That in the presence at this Convention of our gifted and gracious comrade, Laura Ormiston Chant, we have rejoiced in a visible token of the strong "tie that binds" the white ribbon women of England and America, and which has been of incalculable service in unifying our mutual work, we welcome her to our country and our homes, and ask her to bear to Lady Henry Somerset and all our sisters across the sea, the assurance of our ever loving and grateful remembrance and of our unfailing prayers for them and the hallowed home cause to which their loyal lives are consecrated.

THANKS.

Resolved. That we express to our sisters of the Maryland W. C. T. U. our most cordial, loving appreciation of the complete arrangements made by them for the success of this Convention; to the people of Baltimore for their gracious hospitality; to the pastors who so kindly welcomed us to their pulpits on the Sabbath; to the press for accurate and extended notices of all the proceedings; to the Sergeant-at-Arms and her assistants for their heroic efforts; to the young gentlemen who so kindly served us as ushers and collectors; to the motormen and conductors for considerate attentions received; to the Remington Typewriter Company for the use of two machines; to the railroads for reduction of rates, and to their employes for courteous treatment; to Mrs. C. F. Grow, chairman of the transportation committee, for her arduous labors in securing these rates; to the waitresses and pages for their efficient and courteous services; to the Baltimore Y's and to the faculty and students of the Woman's College for their beautiful receptions; to Mrs. Belle Cole Shefloe, musical director, and the Convention chorus for the uplift of their lovely songs; to the male quartet and the College Glee Club for their inspiring music; to Mrs. Katherine Willard Baldwin for the inspiration of her exquisite voice; to the manager of Music Hall and assistants; to the postoffice department, and to all who have in any way contributed to the comfort and efficiency of our Convention.

borrowing

If you have borrowed from health to satisfy the demands of business, if your blood is not getting that constant supply of fat from your food it should have, you must pay back—from somewhere, and the somewhere will be from the fat stored up in the body.

The sign of this borrowing is thinness, the result—nerve-waste. You need fat to keep the blood in health, unless you want to live with no reserve force—live from hand to mouth.

THOROUGHNESS is an admirable quality, but a college boy who devoted four years to the freshman course was perhaps a little too thorough.

$100 IN GOLD REWARD.

To the boy or girl under eighteen years of age who will write the best hundred-word reading notice, commending "Garland" Stoves and Ranges, "The World's Best," covering the following points, we will pay the above sum as a reward. Address 89, care of the Michigan Stove Company, Chicago, Ill., inclosing 2-cent stamp.

Point One—There is more profit to the merchant in selling imitations than genuine "Garlands."

Point Two—That "Garlands" are no higher in price than other so-called first-class Stoves and Ranges.

Point Three—"Garlands" are made in over seven hundred styles and sizes for heating and cooking, for all kinds of fuel, and suited to any room in the house.

Point Four—The only line of Stoves and Ranges in the world made under one name or trade-mark in which first quality only is assured and guaranteed, are "Garlands."

Point Five—By insisting upon it all consumers can get the genuine "Garlands," "The World's Best."

Home Hints

Rice Snow Balls:—Put one quarter of a pound of rice into a saucepan with one and a half pints of new milk, two ounces of sugar and two ounces of sweet almonds, blanched and minced fine. Boil it till the rice is tender. Dip some small cups into cold water (to prevent the rice sticking), fill them with the rice and set away to cool. When cold, turn them out onto a flat dish, surround them with preserves or marmalade. Serve with rich cream.

Is there anything equal to a holder for getting out of sight? When wanted in a hurry to lift a hot kettle or frying pan it is sure to be under the coal scuttle, back of the table, or "just where it was dropped." Because her scissors have the same trick of making themselves invisible, the saleswoman, dressmaker and milliner fastens them by a tape to her apron belt. Do the same with your kitchen holder when you are cooking, and you will not only save your apron, but your fingers, and possibly your temper.

Teachers have been heard to say that neglect in preparing nourishing lunches is the cause of much of the headache which becomes chronic with many children. Thoughtless or lazy mothers get rid as they think, of all responsibility in this matter by giving the children five or ten cents and telling them to buy their own lunch. The ever-present candy store gets the money, and the child gets candy, nuts, some rich, greasy cake, and often it is gum or a cigarette. Mothers, think on these things.

There are many people who need the nourishment to the system which cod-liver oil would give, but their stomachs refuse to accept it. Sweet cream is a highly recommended substitute for the oil, being a nutritious food which can be taken by those inclined to consumption, or having feeble digestion, and also by aged persons.

A pillow filled with fresh hops is a very quieting headrest for one suffering from nervous headache or weariness. The cover may be made of pretty brown linen or pongee silk with a spray of the hop vine embroidered on it in the natural colors.

Croquettes will crack open if fried in fat which is not of a sufficiently high temperature. Care should also be taken in rolling in bread crumbs not to get any crumbs below the surface of the croquettes as they are liable to crack wherever the crumbs penetrate. The fat should be so hot that blue smoke rises from the center of the surface of it. The fat is not sufficiently hot when smoking on the edges of the surface. When the fat is just right the croquettes will become a golden brown while you count ninety as the clock ticks. Give them plenty of room in the basket to allow for swelling.

When baked potatoes are wanted for breakfast and there is but limited time in which to cook them, try boiling them ten or fifteen minutes while the oven is heating and finish them in the oven.

The season has again come when the children in many homes must take their lunches to school with them. In many families the providing of this lunch enters into the daily plans for cooking, in others it is a subject which receives little or no consideration. It is really pathetic to see the feeling exhibited among children at the noon recess over the opening of the lunches. Often a little boy or girl will regularly be absent from the social group of playmates because no lunch could be supplied from the scanty stores at home, and the child will not willingly bring its poverty into pitying notice. Another has a slice or two of thick bread with scraps of roughly cut meat, done up in a piece of brown wrapping or even printed paper. This child will not go hungry but the meal is more hearty than tempting. Furnish the child with a stoutly made basket, or if he will break anything in the shape of a basket, let it be a bright or prettily painted pail. Line it with a fresh napkin, if it be nothing better than a square of old muslin fringed. Put in a plentiful supply of smoothly cut and spread bread and butter, a little cold meat, chipped beef or meat loaf, a tiny cup of jelly or preserves, cookies or a piece of plain cake, an apple, banana or orange if convenient; cover with another of the little school napkins and your child will not be ashamed to open his lunch and he will go back to his studies refreshed. To many mothers these suggestions will seem almost impertinent. But the fact remains that to many a sensitive, dainty child the dinner hour is anything but a pleasure.

A YOUNG lad, whose teacher is rather free with the rod, remarked the other day that "they had too many hollerdays at their school."

THE teacher gave the school a short lesson in physiology, and among other things she told them how much the stomach can contain and the harm of eating too much. The next day she asked Bobby to tell her something about the lesson and he said: "My stomach can hold two platefuls."

HERE is a scene from an oral examination at school:

"Can you tell me anything about the family of George Washington?"

"Yes'm."

"What is it?"

"He was the husband of Mrs. Washington, and, and—"

"And what?"

"And the father of his country!"

PATRICK, coming into a street car, found only one seat vacant, and promptly took it.

"It's looky I come when I did," said he.

"That's so, Pat," answered some one.

"Bekase," he went on, "if I was comin' a sicond later, I'd be afther havin' crowdhed meself out of me sate!"

METAPHORS are like fireworks; they are ornamental, but they need careful handling.

"THE minister says he had a nice chat with you down the street this afternoon," said Mrs. Henderson to her youthful son, Amos.

"A nice chat!" answered Amos. "All the boys had gone down to the pond for a swim, and he kept me there almost ten minutes. I put on a pleasant face, I guess. I tried to, anyhow; but I was on pins and needles all the time behind my back."

"WHY in the world don't you grease that lawn-mower of yours?" asked a lady of her next door neighbor's hired man.

"Missis told me not to till you had your pianer tuned," answered the hired man.

WHEN Fay was about four years old, she went to a circus for the first time in her small existence. On her return her aunt said to her: "Well, my dear, what did they have at the circus?" "O auntie, it was lovely," answered Fay in the fullness of her joy, "they had pink lemonade and elephants."

"THIS is about the time of the year," said Mrs. Watts to her neighbor, "that the fishing fever strikes my husband. If he can get out on the banks of some creek and catch two or three little mudcats in the course of an afternoon, he is perfectly happy." "So he is fond of fishing, then?" "Fond of fishing? Why, that man is a perfect anglomaniac."

LAWLESS are they who make their wills their law.

FIRST MOUSE—"Let's go out and scare that crowd of women. Are you with me?" Second mouse—"Better be careful. If they happen to belong to the 'new woman' crowd, you may get smashed."

TEACHER (trying to make the pupil recognize the word see on the blackboard)—"What can you do with your eyes, Johnnie?"

Johnnie (triumphantly, and with suitable illustration of his reply)—"Shet 'em!"

MRS. SNAGGS (reading the fashion news)—"Yellow is to be a very fashionable color."

Mr. Snaggs—"Then our baby is right in style. He's a yeller."

MAMMA said one day she'd like to know what the sun was made out of, when five-year-old Bertie exclaimed: "I know! It's lightness and warmness mixed together and made round."

JOHNNY—"Why, uncle, you walk lame this morning."

Uncle—"Yes, there was an accident on the bridge yesterday, and I was caught in the jam."

Johnny—"Yes, mother caught me in the jam once and I walked lame for a month."

"WE can dispense without you." The sentence is not so ungrammatical as it sounds. It was spoken by an apothecary to a prescription clerk whom he had just discharged.

"YOU seem thoughtful, Henry," said Mr. Meekton's better half.

"Yes, an idea just struck me."

"What was it?"

"I was wondering whether, by next season, the new woman will be gentlemanly enough to take her hat off in the theater."

NOVEMBER MAGAZINES.

MCCLURE'S for November contains an excellent sketch of Major-General Nelson A. Miles, by George E. Pond, with portraits and other illustrations.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY for November concludes Prof. E. P. Evans' exhaustive paper on "Recent Recrudescence of Superstition," a paper that reveals conditions of thought hardly credible as existing in the close of the nineteenth century.

The current issue of THE CENTURY marks the twenty-fifth anniversary number of this old and valued friend. A new story by Mrs. Humphry Ward, entitled, "Sir George Tressady," with a particularly fine portrait of the author, is one of the attractions of the new volume.

A timely article in the November CHAUTAUQUAN is on "American Character in Politics," by Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart; after reading the same the "Average Man" will be at peace with himself and all the world, so fair—and just, too, it may be said—is the picture of the representative American.

The NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE for November contains an admirable article on "Public School Music," by Samuel W. Cole. This is a theme that might well be sharply exploited by the press, for the music of a nation is surely affected no little by the conduct of this department of study—for such it ought and is now growing to be.

The leading character portrayal of the current issue of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS is that of Louis Pasteur, who "opened up a new world, the world of the 'infinitely little,' and earned for himself the right to be called 'father of bacteriology.'" The valuable article is by Prof. Percy Franklin and the late John Tyndall, the latter having written a review of Pasteur's discoveries in 1884.

November's interesting FORUM closes with "A Generation of College Women," by Frances M. Abbott, which gives a comparative view at the results of college education, Vassar being the particular center of observation. Out of 1,082 graduates, 409 became home-makers and 408 teachers. A tabulated statement showing what the remainder have done is of interest.

Among the notable articles of the month is a contribution to the November ARENA, by Prof. George D. Herron, upon "The Sociality of Jesus' Religion." Were Prof. Herron's conceptions of righteousness more widespread among religious people, the simple gospel of the truth as it was in Christ Jesus would not be subjected to such distortions as the nineteenth century witnesses. "We know the legend," says this eminent thinker, "that Julian the Emperor once said that it is much easier to worship Jesus than to obey Him! Whether the saying be Julian's or not, it is true in Christian history and experience. It is easy to be worshipfully or professionally religious; to be just and righteous is quite another matter. Religion is relation, and a right relation with God is primarily a right relation with human life, where the God of man is. The sociality of religious experience is its value alike to God and man; its sociality is the true measure of its reality."

Every reformer or "sympathizer" with that class of people—happily growing in numbers day by day—who looks into the November issue of THE COSMOPOLITAN will welcome Theodore Roosevelt's article on "Taking the New York Police out of Politics." The closing sentences of this refreshingly wholesome and staunch paper may be quoted here: "Whatever the present Board of Police has accomplished is due to the fact that it has proceeded on the assumption that the decalogue and the Golden Rule are peculiarly in place in practical politics. So far as the department under us is concerned, we have shown that the purification of politics is easy enough if men will start about it with common sense and earnestness. We have acted with the ordinary honesty which would be expected in private life of men who were engaged in some enterprise for the common good; and the practical effect of our actions has been that in New York the orderly observance of law has been secured as it has never been before, and that the honesty and efficiency of the police force have been immeasurably increased."

Books ... Books

Now that the winter evenings are fast approaching, old and young need some good book that will instruct as well as amuse, to pass away the evenings. Below we give a partial list of books suitable for all:

A GREAT MOTHER. By FRANCES E. WILLARD and MRS. MINERVA B. NORTON. There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to this volume. It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession, but not often do we find those who are willing to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose. Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction: therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions. Bound in silver and gray. Price, $1.50.

CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE. By MARY ALLEN WEST. The childhood of to-day is the nation of to-morrow! There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual, spiritual. To this end Childhood, Its Care and Culture was written. In a letter to Miss West, Madam Willard wrote: "If I could have but one book beside the Bible to help me in bringing up children, I would by all means choose to have this. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Bound in cloth, marble edges, $3.00. Full morocco, gilt edges, $4.25.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES of White Ribbon women (official) contains brief biographies of the prominent W. C. T. U. workers of the world. Beautifully illustrated, containing forty half tone, cabinet size portraits. One hundred and twenty-five pages neatly bound in cloth and paper. Will interest all White Ribboners. Send for it. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 50 cents.

CONFIDENTIAL TALKS WITH YOUNG WOMEN. By LYMAN B. SPERRY, M. D., Lecturer on Sanitary Science, Carleton College, Minn. Author of Concerning Narcotics, Confidential Talks with Young Men, etc., with introduction by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen. This helpful volume, treating an important subject from a Christian, medical point of view, should be carefully read, and its contents imparted to the daughters of to-day. 16mo. cloth, price, 75 cents.

BEFORE HE IS TWENTY. Five perplexing phases of the boy question considered. By ROBERT J. BURDETTE, FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, EDWARD W. BOK, MRS. BURTON HARRISON and MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT. With portraits of the authors. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. "The boy of the period is unquestionably interesting. He is more so than was his brother of a century ago. . . . It means much, particularly to parents who are charged with the responsibility of a training that must adjust itself, in a greater or less degree, to the time their boys are born, live and shall live. . . . It is for the purpose of presenting the wisest and best concentrated modern thought on the different phases of the boy of the period that the articles in this little book were conceived."—PREFACE. Price 75.

MARCHING SONGS NO 3. NEW. Fresh from the press, full of bright, sparkling tunes, suitable for Senior and Junior Legions. 96 pages and cover. Price 15 cents. Numbers 1 and 2. 10 cents. Compiled by ANNA A. GORDON. The collection includes temperance songs for use in Kindergarten and Kitchen Garden Schools, songs which teach Sabbath observance, kindness to animals and other kindred principles which it is wise to instill early into the minds of the "cold water army" if we would have them embodied in the law of the land.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. The story of the life of Mary E. Willard—"My Sister Mary," as she is yet tenderly called by the author. A writer says, "It is the most entrancing of all histories. To the cultivated and appreciative reader of every age, sex and sect, there is spread out here a rare and rich feast from the enjoyment of which he must arise a purer, stronger and better nature." Price, paper, 10 cents. Handsomely bound in cloth, 75 cents.

A WOMAN EVANGEL. By EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH. A picture of temperance work along the lines so familiar to all W. C. T. U. women. The story will interest all readers—its Gospel temperance meetings, ostracism because of political conscientiousness, downfall due to moderate drinking—all are true to life. Send for it. Price, $1.25.

THE SCIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life," paper, board and illuminated cover. 12mo, 35c. "To be a mother is the grandest vocation in the world. No other human being has a position of such power and influence. She holds in her hands the destiny of nations, for to her is necessarily committed the making of the nations' citizens." This extract from the author's prefatory chapter but enunciates the principle of the little volume, and our readers are sufficiently familiar with the gifted author's former volumes to realize that in this new line of thought they will have a helpful treatise.

A GIFT OF LOVE. By ROSE PORTER. Love texts for 365 days. Long 18mo. Daintily bound, white cloth silver top, boxed. Price $1.00.

A GIFT OF PEACE. By ROSE PORTER. "Peace" texts for every day in the year, with quotations from choice authors in poetry and prose, aptly fitting the text for the day. Uniform with a "Gift of Love." Price $1.00.

BOYS AND OTHER BOYS. GIRLS OF TO-DAY. By LUCY A. SCOTT. Just the books to give needed advice and help to the boy or girl in the critical early teens. Not "goody-goody" but clear, strong, faithful, interesting. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK. A selection for each day from the best writers among women. Edited by ANNA A. GORDON. Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury. Handsomely bound. Price, $1.00.

HYGIENE OF THE HOME. By SUSAN BURR BARNES. A valuable guide along the lines of home keeping. A good book for housekeepers and mothers. Cloth bound. Price 75 cents.

COLUMBUS AND WHAT HE FOUND. By MRS. MARY H. HULL. This is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure yet thrilling manner. Columbus will be always with us as much a feature in the future as Washington, being the step beyond Washington and the home nation into the great mother, Europe, and the beginnings of the Child Columbia. This book is filled with patriotic enthusiasm. Bound in cloth. Price, $1.00.

GLIMPSES OF FIFTY YEARS. An Autobiography of Frances E. Willard. Prepared by special and unanimous request of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention of 1887, with an introduction by HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, contains over 700 pages. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Prices, bound in cloth, $2.25. Half morocco, gilt edges, $3.00. Full morocco, gilt edges, $3.75.

The schoolhouses of the United States number 236,426, and are valued at $398,435,039.

A Good Templar Lodge was instituted in Geneva on the 21st ultimo—this being the twentieth lodge formed in Switzerland.

In July, 1896, the liquor traffic of eight more provinces of Russia will be placed under government control; in July, 1897, seven other provinces will be added and by July, 1898, the entire empire will be thus under the dispensary system.

Chief Khama has received a welcome address from the Good Templar Lodge at Enderby, Leicestershire, which place he visited under a promise made in his native country to a Miss Young, who is a member of "Charles Brook" lodge and a missionary in Khama's country.

The recent Indian Conference at Lake Mohonk was very encouraging. About one-eighth of the Indian population have now detached themselves from tribal life, and have become American citizens under the allottment of lands in severalty. The dominant question of the conference—what to do for the betterment of the Indian Territory—was fully discussed.

The National Temperance Congress, held at Chester, England, recently, was in nearly all respects a great success. It cannot be said that of late temperance men have been hiding their light under a bushel. In Scotland, in the northeast and west of England, conferences and demonstrations have been held. At none of these meetings was the note struck one of despair. It is generally recognized that much education on the temperance question is needed, but there is no lack of hopefulness about the work. At each of the gatherings referred to, the flag of the United Kingdom Alliance has been hoisted. At the Chester congress was some divergence of opinion as to the place temperance legislation ought to occupy in the movement. Some seem to think it deserves no place at all, whilst others stoutly maintain that without legislation the work of moral suasion was ridiculously handicapped.

A Congress on Africa, with the fullest, clearest, most accurate, most inspiring information from the Dark Continent, given by natives, missionaries and scholars, competent to speak of this amazingly interesting land—of its civilization, missions, resources, climate, prospects—is the plan of the Stewart Missionary Foundation for Africa, in Gammon Theological Seminary at Atlanta, December 13 to 15. It is one of the congresses officially recognized by the Cotton States and International Exposition. Eminent representatives of church and state have already taken places on the program, and latest reports from the great missionary societies carrying on work in Africa will be a feature. Thousands of American negroes have been misled by misrepresentations of their relation to the civilization and redemption of Africa, their fatherland. This congress promises to throw a flood of light on this important question. It will immediately follow the Methodist Episcopal Church Congress on December 12.

In these days of temperance agitation, when the assertion is frequently made on Prohibition platforms that the drinking habits of the people are increasing, a return of the consumption of various articles in common use in New Zealand for every year since 1878, which has just been completed, is of special interest. This return shows that in 1878 the consumption of spirits in the colony was 4.73 gallons per head of population. It has steadily fallen, until last year it was 2.24 gallons. The consumption of wine has fallen from 0.70 gallons to 0.48 gallons; of imported ale and beer from 1.75 gallons to 0.48 gallons. The returns from New Zealand brewed beer are only from 1881, but in that year the consumption was 14.6 gallons as against 10.9 in 1894. Tobacco also shows a falling off from 7.64 pounds per head in 1878 to 6.44 pounds last year, but there is an increase in the consumption of cigars and cigarettes from 0.63 pounds per head in 1878 to 0.73 pounds per head in 1894. Tea shows a slight decrease, and coffee a decrease of about half a pound, but sugar shows an increase of no less than 23 pounds per head since 1878—64.61 pounds per head in 1878, 87.21 pounds in 1894. Of course the fact is that there is very much less drinking of intoxicants now than even ten years ago. The native born population does not drink.

ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK CITY

TEMPERANCE principles applied to business constitute the perfection of our reform ideas and hopes. This ideal finds its most perfect fulfillment in The American Temperance Life Insurance Association. This organization is controlled by and exists entirely for Total Abstainers who want sound life insurance at Total Abstainers' rates. These are only about half what other companies are compelled to charge, for the self-evident reason that abstainers live longer and are better risks than those who drink, even moderately. Every reader of The Union Signal should be a member. Remember the example set you by the late Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, who joined this Association some years ago. Send a postal with your age and address, and let us give you figures on a policy.

Publisher's Notes

The prize offered for the best contribution to Marching Songs, No. 3, has been awarded by the committee to Dr. O. B. Bird, of Elm, New Jersey. The committee who kindly assisted Miss Gordon in awarding this prize, consisted of Miss Mary Lathbury, Rev. Theodore Seward and Mrs. Alice J. Harris.

This spirited song, entitled "Philosophy," may be found on page 85:

"If you want to learn philosophy of true
Platonic sort,
If you want to know how licensing will cut the traffic short,
Just ask an old Republican with moss
upon his back,
And he will tell you plainly that a spike is but a tack.

"He will prove by mathematics one saloon is less than three,
And if customers are ten to one it's better, don't you see?"

These lines are slowly sung as a solo, and in quick measure at the end of each comes in the ringing chorus,
"Ching a-ling, a-ling, a-ling, a-ling," etc.

This music is finely adapted to other words, and a capital one for local hits, ad libitum. One verse is sufficient to arouse the most lethargic meeting, and the entire song is guaranteed to enkindle enthusiasm which will "spread the earth around."

Try it in your neighborhood and report results. Remember 94 pages of splendid music for just 15 cts.

Have you noticed how complete is the echo of the Convention, and how spicy and interesting are the various reports of each of the five Convention days? If you have not read that complete and vivid description, please send at once for a copy. Five cents only. Buy an extra copy for yourselves to keep among your treasures. Send a copy to your brother, sister, neighbor, to educate them along temperance lines. Send one to your minister, with a blue line drawn against some thought which will find a responsive chord in his heart. Get one or two copies for your public library, and half a dozen for the wall pocket in your depot. But be sure and order early, for the thousands of extra copies will soon be scattered over the world. If you want a hundred send at once $2.50, which is a low price considering the size of the paper and its feast of good things.

HAVE YOU ORDERED

Marching Songs No. 3, the new song book compiled by Miss Anna Gordon to supply the Senior Legioners with fresh, stirring, inspiring music? It is full of gems, and as the season of evening entertainments is at hand will prove just the help you need to enliven your program. The price is a trifle higher than Nos. 1 and 2, but it contains one-third more music, choice, well selected and original songs, appropriate for any temperance gathering. Send fifteen cents for sample copy, and we are confident a large wholesale order will follow.

AN APPEAL.

One of the notable evenings at the National Convention in Baltimore, was that in which the state songs were sung by delegates, etc. In response to several requests we shall publish a souvenir containing these songs and the mottoes of the states if copy is received at an early date. Will the secretaries of the various states forward copy as early as practicable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple.

"DO EVERYTHING."

Again the supply of "Do Everything" is exhausted, the demand having been such as to cover nearly the entire invoice of 500 copies before the books reached America. We shall again have to ask the consideration of our patrons, but will fill orders for this instructive, comprehensive manual at the earliest moment possible.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Queen Victoria has another great-grandchild, the daughter of the Czar and Czarina of Russia, born last Friday.

Georgia's legislature is to deal with the governor's investigation and report regarding inhuman treatment of convicts.

One million dollars was voted for missions at the general missionary committee meeting of the M. E. church in Denver, Thursday.

A dispatch announces that Russia has ordered out five battleships to take part in the naval demonstration against Turkey at Constantinople.

Providence, R. I., has been the scene of the annual Baptist Congress. Home and foreign missions and evangelical work were the chief topics discussed.

A petition signed by sixty thousand persons has been presented to the Chicago board of education asking for recognition of the Bible in the public schools.

About one hundred and fifty delegates attended the Iowa Woman Suffrage convention last week. Plans were made for a mammoth petition to present before the coming legislature.

The eightieth birthday of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, one of the honored pioneers in the movement for equal suffrage, was the occasion of a demonstration in Metropolitan Opera House, New York, last week.

ADVICES from England indicate that the executive committee meeting of the B. W. T. A. held in Plymouth, October 28 and 29, was successful and harmonious. Lady Henry Somerset presided and Miss Agnes Weston was the hostess. From seventy-five to ninety women attend this committee which meets quarterly.

WE give this week among our contributed articles the address of Booker T. Washington at the opening of the Atlanta Exposition. Although delivered two months ago, it still continues to be an interesting topic of discussion, and many UNION SIGNAL readers will be glad to get it in full. For it was, as has been well said, "an epoch-making talk," and one which can not fail to arouse thought and infuse a better spirit in both races concerning their relations to each other. Mr. Washington, as one of the most successful industrial educators in the country, realizes that industrial training for American youth, irrespective of color, will do much toward solving many a social problem, and among them the "race problem."

MISS WILLARD writes us that she finds herself taken to task because she is so often mentioned in THE UNION SIGNAL, and particularly because so many of her "twitterings" are in the Convention number. We are therefore moved to declare, first, that aside from news items she does not furnish the material for these personal paragraphs; second, that being so rarely at Headquarters she has nothing to do with the make-up of the paper; third, that the editors who do attend to that part of the work are fully prepared to stand sponsors for such quotations from the sayings of the President of the World's and National W. C. T. U., and such commentary on her proceedings as seems appropriate to the official organ of that organization.

THE general officers sent the following message (from James Russell Lowell) to Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton and to the pioneers whose great reunion at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York city, November 12, assumed a national character:

"Then to side with truth is noble
When we share her wretched crust,
Ere her cause brings fame and profit,
And 'tis prosperous to be just."

Mrs. Mary T. Burt was chosen by the executive committee to represent our society on this occasion, and the box in the Opera House taken by the World's and National W. C. T. U. was decorated with white ribbon, flags, emblems and insignia.

MISS WILLARD'S stay in Chicago has been, of necessity, an exceedingly busy one. In addition to the meetings chronicled in our last issue, she has spoken at the "housewarming" of the Settlement of Northwestern University, of which she is a trustee; for Dr. Mark M. Thompson, founder of the Christian Home for Intemperate Men, on West Monroe street, and twice at Prof. Graham Taylor's Settlement on the West Side. Several days were taken up almost wholly by general officers' meetings, in which much planning for the coming year was done. She has been in committee meetings, trustee meetings and other meetings galore, and goes through them all with her old time strength and vigor. Miss Gordon has also been similarly engaged, and the busy hives at each end of the long Temple corridor on the eleventh floor, have, apparently, been busier than ever. Miss Willard's careful investigation of the settlement idea will, doubtless, eventuate in a W. C. T. U. Settlement in some busy center of our national life. This is devoutly to be hoped, as no movement of modern times seems to us so clear a manifesting of the Christ spirit as thus going to the poor and sin-sick, and as one of our women has expressed it, "putting underneath them the Everlasting Arms."

THE W. C. T. U. department of peace and arbitration, in coöperation with the peace organizations of the world, has appointed the third Sabbath in December as a General Peace Day to be observed by public peace meetings, peace sermons, peace exercises in Sabbath-schools or L. T. L's, peace for prayer meeting topics, etc. Every union should send for the special program, which has been prepared and published by Mrs. H. J. Bailey, superintendent of the peace department, Winthrop Center, Me., price one cent per copy. It is desirable that every local W. C. T. U. should observe the day in some special manner in the interests of peace.

THE general officers have been in session this week at Headquarters, carrying out the instructions of the executive committee and attending to details of work. They all seem in excellent health and spirits. Mrs. Hoffman has just returned from presiding over a most enthusiastic state convention in Missouri. She was reëlected president by a unanimous vote, and arrangements made to retain her in the state for a year. The protest of her constituency against her proposed trip around the world has rendered that enterprise impracticable. She will remain at the Temple until the Minutes are completed, which, under her energetic management, will not be long, and meanwhile is open for lecture engagements in the vicinity of Chicago. Mrs. Stevenson has just returned from Atlanta, where she, with Mrs. Nichols, of Indiana, and other leading women, conducted a day's white-ribbon meeting at the exposition.

THE movement for the establishment of the fourth Sunday in November as Temperance Sunday, now being agitated by various religious bodies and receiving the coöperation of the Sunday-school department of W. C. T. U. work, was heartily endorsed at the meeting of our general officers last week, and they desire to urge white ribbon workers everywhere to earnest effort for the observance of Sunday, November 24, in the interests of temperance. In communities where no program for this day has as yet been outlined by pastors or local union we would suggest that though the time is short, some temperance feature might yet be introduced into the services of next Sunday, either in pulpit, Sunday-school, or Young People's society. A temperance mass-meeting in the afternoon or evening, addressed by leading ministers and Christian workers would, if announced from the various pulpits and Sunday-schools Sunday morning, doubtless draw out a large and interested audience.

IN view of the fact that Miss Willard's utterances concerning the Staten Island basis of union have been misinterpreted, and the omission of her declaration concerning that platform from the Convention number of THE UNION SIGNAL has been misconstrued, we give by request special prominence to the following extract from her annual address which fully explains her attitude toward the platform in question: "I earnestly hope that the Prohibition Park Conference of Reforms held last spring may indicate the possible selection of a Presidential candidate by the Prohibition and Labor parties on whom they can unite though they will undoubtedly hold separate national conventions and put forth each its own platform. As neither can by any possibility elect a candidate, it would seem to be the dictate of common sense to poll as large a vote as possible in testimony of the strength of the reform movement of the nation. However, it is my observation that there are such cross-currents, conflicting interests, and antagonistic aims that we cannot be sanguine that such a plan will be adopted, much as we might desire union of action concerning the chief candidate." Miss Willard regards the Staten Island program as "broad and brotherly," but simply a general consensus of opinion and binding no one.

DEAD.

BY MRS. M. P. A. CROZIER.

Oh, but the summer was sweet!
Oh, but the summer was fair!
Now she lies dead at our feet,
And the wind blows cold through her hair.

Cover her beautiful face,
Gray clouds of the autumn sky!
Homeless leaves, on her burying place
Gather, and softly lie!

Lie till the crocus flower
Pushes up to the light,
To say that the resurrection hour
Breaks on the winter night.

LOVE'S PROVING.

In Two Chapters.

BY JULIA NEELEY FINCH.

CHAPTER II.

It was Mammy. I knew her alert step, and as the lifted portiere of sheer swiss framed her small, neat figure it seemed to me that I saw whole troops of babies clambering about her—all the babies she had nursed and loved, and still kept in her fond heart, remembering each name and identity as could not I, although her junior by several years. I never saw Mammy without seeing "the baby," our first, lying across her snowy lap, dead—one little hand curled like pale rose petals about Mammy's brown and knotted finger, while on its quiet breast rained tears from her faithful eyes! Her small brown face with its clear outline, low brow, liquid, tender eyes and full mouth, with a gentle expression over all, had a drawn and anxious look, and her gay bandana did not stand up in quite as many alert bows as usual. Her hands trembled visibly as she drew the hem of her apron between her fingers. Her "courtesy," though, was as full of old-fashioned grace as it was wont to be, and her rich, velvety voice, more like the guttural notes of the ringdove as it calls to its mate, than any other sound I recall, had all its suave respect as she spoke directly to me.

"Marster—ef you don' hurry you sholy will find Miss Haista, po lam, daid! I lef Jinny, dat fly-up-de-crik, wid her, but oh, marster, honey, do herry! herry! I is so skeared 'bout the po chile! An' dat man!"

With a heavy heart and asking a few questions, simple enough to come within the range of Mammy's comprehension, I hurried into shoes and coat and prepared to make all possible speed to Hester.

Oh! but I was sad at heart and had many misgivings as to the result of this night. One thing I have hated even to chronicle. More than once had I come upon young Egerton suspiciously near one of those devilish, velvet-soft, swinging doors, and as I closely scanned his face I remarked each time too much flush on it and a metallic glitter in the splendid black eye (so black as to seem without depth, or so it seemed to me then); and once, as Elizabeth and I were sitting with Hester in her small, cozy sitting-room, (for in anticipation of the new "boarder" they were now keeping house at no great distance from us in a delightful little home made beautiful with many small feminine adornments of Hester's manufacture,) we heard a step stumble on the stair, and upon Hester leaving the room to "see if it were not Gerald," wife and I sat in ominous silence, eyeing each other with solicitous looks, pending her return. She came, bringing with her Jenny, her maid and house girl, a gay, good-natured creature, with a rolling black eye, deep chocolate skin, and a tendency to ribbons and decorations—Jenny carrying a tray holding delicate orange syrup and ices and some little thin sugar cakes of which I was particularly fond. As Hester said nothing to account for the noise we had heard we asked nothing.

So after asking Mammy, who sat perched like a small brown wren on the high front seat by her larger, if not better, half, when Mr. Egerton had left home, and where they supposed him to be, and receiving the answer, "God knows, marster, I don't! He was dere at dinner, long about four o'clock, and I ain' sot eyes on him sence!" (which sentence had died away in low mutterings and growlings, like the tail end of a peal of thunder), I settled down by Elizabeth in anxious quiet.

As we drove up to the gate I heard a shriek, then one peal after another of the most terrible laughter. "Oh, God! help us now in this hour of need!" This I heard from Elizabeth, but the rest of us moved quietly enough up the walk and into the little home! What words can tell you what I saw? There on the hall floor, in a state of beastly drunkenness, lay the master of the house, the father of the little creature now about to enter the world! His face, pale to ghastliness, figure supine, showing in his light summer suit, against the sombre brown paint of the floor, all its splendid outline. One arm lay out, and in the palm thus exposed was a smouldering cigar. Jenny, good-hearted creature, almost crazed with the sudden responsibility thrust upon her by Mammy's defalcation, had managed to slip one of the soft fur rugs from the hall between his head and the floor, and was now following Hester up and down, through and across the whole house. For thus was Hester; in the clutches of maternal anguish—brain and heart alike distracted by this culminating horror of her short married life—a raving maniac, striding with long swift steps, more like those of an enraged tigress than her own stately, gliding tread, all through the house, every door of which she had thrown wide open. Added to the weird horror of the scene, was the fact that the light breeze which fans our city steadily after sundown had blown out every light, save the one in a rear room, and the smell of gas was well nigh suffocating.

Mammy with her quick wit whispered, "Mistress, you stay here, and mek dat fool ten' to de gas, and leave him alone, he's all right," this, with a withering glance at the unconscious figure on the floor. "Me! I'm gwine wid marster. Oh! de po lam!"

I will not harrow your heart by telling you of our effort to get Hester to bed. It was only by continually dwelling upon the baby, the future, that I succeeded at last in getting the poor creature quiet. Too soon, alas! were those peals of laughter succeeded by low and agonized moans; and for awhile it seemed that Hester, and the frail little blossom of this untoward union, would pass with the night. At last, however, she lay there, quiet, conscious, and, oh! with what a world of love beaming in her beautiful eyes upon the snowy bundle by her side. Elizabeth sat beside her, and Mammy at a little distance, by the dim taper on the table. I was not going to lie down until I felt I could leave mother and child without risk.

As I reached the door a clear voice arrested me, "Doctor, is Gerald sufficiently himself to see me and baby?" Her voice vibrated and sank on the last word, until I thought never had I heard so sweet a sound. Surprising! No trace of wildness, no agony in her tones, all seemed sunk in the splendor of maternity! "I will see," I answered as I passed into the room into which Elizabeth had told me they had succeeded in dragging, coaxing and assisting Egerton, during the night, with Spenser's aid. My heart was full of intense bitterness against a man who could so forget himself, and at such a time.

He lay sleeping as peacefully as a baby, his cheek pillowed on his open palm, and a look of boyish restfulness on his face. All this I took in at a glance. He had none of the fatal marks of the drunkard about him, no foul linen, no disordered attire. There was no unseemly flush on his face, all was quiet peace about him. He lay fully dressed, save for his coat which hung on a chair near, and as I lightly touched him on the shoulder he sprang to his feet, alert, wide awake and without a hint of the evening's debauch about him! In my heart I execrated him the more, thinking his course all the more beastly because of his splendid and healthful equipoise which thus enabled his frame to withstand its desecration by his foul appetite. Tossing his hair from his face as his eye met mine, in an instant he was of deathly whiteness and his heart throbbed in his voice as he spoke.

"Hester! My God! Doctor, is anything wrong?"

I could scarcely give him a decent answer, but I managed to bring out, "I don't know what you call wrong, but Hester has been through a good deal without you these last few hours!"

"Oh, Doctor!" My heart relented a little, for the fellow evidently loved her. Not quite so well as himself, but still the genuine ring was in his voice.

"She wants to see you," I said, and turning made as though to leave the room.

"Doctor, I know I don't deserve anything but a good, long, shotgun and a man to pull the trigger, but for God's sake tell me,"—

"What?" I broke in. "That you lay on the hall floor when my wife and I came, beastly drunk, and that your young, delicate wife walked around and about you in her pangs of childbirth, a lunatic? Oh, I can tell you something," I said grimly, "I can tell you this thing, young sir, I am an old man, but if that were my daughter lying yonder with an hour old baby on her breast, and you were her husband,"—I could literally get no farther, for with a bound he was on his knees at my feet, both hands holding my old, withered palms, while his fresh, young lips mumbled away at their corrugated surface as does a babe at its mother's breast, while hot tears rolled over his cheeks.

Finally he pulled himself together, and I said, not half as gruffly as I wanted to, for somehow the foolish boy's tears on my hand were like spring showers about sun-baked roots, very softening, "Be sure you keep her quiet."

"Do you mean she wants to see me, Doctor?"

"Well! I suppose she does, she said so." At this moment Mammy's face appeared at the door, and she said: "Marster, if he is a-coming, I wish he'd come; my lam is getting on-patient," so I motioned him forward and I followed. As he stepped quietly enough before me I could but notice the stalwart build of his shoulders, the straight elasticity of the young back, as fairly poised as a young spruce pine on a sunny hill top, and the sturdy set of the loins, and the elegance of the limbs and feet; and I wondered that God could send so weak a spirit to dwell in so fair a temple. Entering the room, he paused as at the threshold of a church, and I saw his lips move, then he went forward with a firm, steady step, head high, face pale to ghastliness. I think even in his brutish sleep the sensitive brain retained the sound of those shrill peals of heart breaking laughter, and he dreaded their recurrence, but as he reached the bed and saw those clear, dark eyes shining on him, the face in which they shone pale, with that transparent and sensitive pallor which is seen nowhere save on the cheek and brow of a young mother, as his eye caught a pink gleam from within the bundle of lace and lawn by her side, I think something in the poor boy's heart broke, then and there, as he sank beside her with a sobbing cry of, "Hester, Hester, the baby here, and I—Oh—God!"

Then as his great deep sobs echoed through the quiet room and Elizabeth bowed her head, weeping, I drew back in the shade of the falling portiere. That was the most sacred scene I have ever in my life witnessed. For perhaps a minute there was no other sound, then Hester's voice, refined and made strangely sweet by her crucifixion of motherhood, rose:

"Gerald, see. Here is our little Geraldine. Dear, I have never asked you to take a pledge, but I do now! Here, lay your hand on our baby's breast, your baby and mine, and pray, dear Gerald, that as is your life, so may hers and mine be, Gerald, mine, too, all together! Never apart any more!"

Then, who can picture the pathos of the scene, when, as the first pale fingers of the dawn came slanting, pointing in at the windows, they touched the hand of Gerald fast locked in Hester's pale fingers, as together they lay on the breast of the sleeping babe, while his voice, broken and rough, faltered: "I, Gerald Egerton, do solemnly swear, by the help of God, never, under any circumstances, in sickness or health (no, not even to save my life), to touch one drop of any intoxicant, in any shape or form," while after him went Hester's low, vibrant voice, repeating the words that let the sunshine in on her future.

That was the beginning of the great intimacy between our families, and now, "I'm sholy," as Mammy, dear old Mammy, used to say, "gittin' along." The baby, on whose breast was written a father's sacred and unbroken pledge (yes, unbroken), is going to be married to Mary's James, he who came just a year or so before Geraldine! Well! Well! Truth certainly outranks fiction when we doctors tell the story! I'm a good deal over seventy, and I tell you I have yet to see, or read, or hear read, the novel that will rank for strangeness alongside of much that I could tell!

TWO WAYS TO WIN.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

"I wish to learn the violin," said she, "and to make myself famous."

She spoke to a philosopher who slowly lifted his tranquil eye and said: "There are two ways. The first and truest is, get the best master that you can, go by yourself and put in several years and practice under his instruction. The second best is, get a fairly good instructor, learn something about the violin and then go to all your friends and ask them to buy tickets to your entertainment and get the newspapers to say that you play well. For awhile the last succeeds, but if you have really mastered your instrument these social and advertising methods will not be needed, for you will have become like Orpheus who had but to put his instrument in motion and even the wild beasts of the forest gathered to listen."

The young lady looked at him with widening eyes.

"I know a case in point," continued the philosopher. "Two young men were graduated from our best university. They were presentable, fine fellows, one of them particularly handsome and both determined to succeed. I was present at a dinner given by the dean one night, a few years later, and the chief justice was there. The handsome young fellow who wished to get on, helped him with his great coat, carried the shawl of a lady of distinction and made himself useful and delightful to every one. When I went down from the dinner I heard the voice of the other young fellow (he had not been asked), who was talking with a group of workingmen on the pavement. They were returning from a meeting that had been addressed by him and he was answering some of their questions. Nobody connected with the dinner gave any thought whatever to Number Two; but ten years later the handsome young fellow was still carrying a lady's shawl and helping a man of fame with his great-coat. He was charming to have about and had made a hit in society; but the other had got in his work in a more thorough and solid way. He had gone to Congress and was the author of standard works on the new Political Economy, and everybody says he will yet himself be the chief justice."

The young lady rose and said to the philosopher, while her face glowed, "Good-by and thank you; I am going by myself to practice the lesson given me on the violin by a great master and another lesson just given me—by a greater."

THE NEW ORDER.

BY REV. LUTHER T. TOWNSEND, D. D., OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

[From his address of welcome to the National Convention.]

Aside from words of congratulation and welcome, may I present in the briefest possible manner three scenes, two of which every student of history will recognize as indisputable facts, the third of which every mind of philosophical forecast will recognize as the inevitable outcome of present tendencies and promises.

In the first scene is a garden. Woman is there, not inferior to man, but his equal; not a subordinate in rank, but bone of man's bone and flesh of his flesh; a co-worker with him, and queen of Eden. Man the protector, woman the light, joy and life of the home.

A second scene comes into our vision. Sin casts its baleful shadow on the earth; in consequence man feels the beads of sweat on his brow, and finds thorns and thistles in the field. Woman is distressed with pain and death. And she who was queen of the world is despoiled of her scepter and crown, and becomes the object of subordination, oppression and cruelty, and in every land destitute of Christian civilization that curse remains to-day. Among the mighty populations of China and India, and of many other countries, woman is found with her neck under the heel of man.

The third scene completes our picture. The song of shepherds is heard. Christ is on the earth. His commission is announced to a woman at the well of Samaria, and she becomes the first preacher of the Messiah outside the Jewish commonwealth. They are women to whom angels from heaven announce an empty tomb, and to women Christ Himself gives His first commission to preach to the world a risen Lord and Saviour. Upon women is pronounced the same benediction that men receive, and they, in common with men, are authorized to be the Lord's witnesses to the end of time, and to them are promised the same gifts of the Spirit that are conferred on the apostles.

It appears also that Paul, whose directions given to certain Asiatic women, having only a local significance, and nothing to do with the women who now fill this hall, expected women to preach, sent women out to preach, gave women directions how to preach, commended those who did preach, and gave the names of no fewer than twelve women whom he recognized as ordained ministers of the Gospel of Christ, and designated them by the same word, deacon, that was applied to Paul and Apollos, and employed the same word, prophesy, in describing what those women deacons were to do, as was used in describing the preaching of the apostles.

Under this new order of things began the restoration. And no one now fails to see that one of the missions of Christianity is to lift the curse of the transgression from man, and at the same time to lift it from woman. Eden is to be restored is the promise, not to man only, but to woman as well. Amid the sublime achievements and accomplishments of Christianity, prophets more than once foresaw this freedom of woman from subordination and bondage that had cursed her from the hour of her expulsion from Eden. The progress of this restoration has been slow, but no slower than the progress of Christianity itself. And just in proportion to the prevalence of an enlightened Christian civilization will be the elevation of woman, and the restoration of her original and queenly rights. Even the apostle who is often misquoted and misunderstood, saw in the coming day that there is neither Greek nor Jew, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, for all are one man in Christ Jesus.

That brighter day is now dawning fast. The sunset of this century is for woman the sunrise of the next. In hundreds of ways she is passing to the upper strata in scholastic attainments, in public work, and in every field in which she has ventured to perform her part. And she has done this without losing one atom of her grace and gentleness.

In the field of literature, on the platform, in the domain of science, in the management of educational institutions, and in whatever intellectual arena she stands, she is proving herself the peer, not of ordinary men merely, but of those who are high priests in their chosen callings. When we see girls in the universities of every land carrying off the prizes and honors; when we see the marked success which women have achieved in organizing and prosecuting missionary, educational and temperance enterprises, and in all sorts of charitable measures that are designed to help the needy and unfortunate, we stand and look with abated breath as to what will come into our vision before this scene now on the canvas shall dissolve into the coming eternities.

Of this we are sure; man should not step aside or down, but he must keep stepping to quick music and up over the hills, or he will be left behind with no defense, except that of brute force.

Hail, daughter of God, mother of men, queen of the coming centuries! We gladly would aid in thy coronation, and we welcome these noble representatives of a sanctified womanhood to this monumental city, lying in the middle latitude, southern enough to abound in every form of hospitality, and northern enough to abound in every enterprise and philanthropy that has for its object the redemption and elevation of the human race.

BOOKER WASHINGTON'S ADDRESS.*

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Board of Directors and Citizens:

One-third of the population of the South is of the negro race. No enterprise seeking the material, civil or moral welfare of this section, can disregard this element of our population and reach the highest success. I but convey to you, Mr. President and Directors, the sentiment of the masses of my race, when I say that in no way have the value and manhood of the American negro been more fittingly and generously recognized, than by the managers of this magnificent exposition at every stage of its progress. It is a recognition that will do more to cement the friendship of the two races, than any occurrence since the dawn of our freedom.

Not only this, but the opportunity here afforded will awaken among us a new era of industrial progress. Ignorant and inexperienced, it is not strange that in the first years of our new life we began at the top instead of at the bottom, that a seat in Congress or the state legislature was more sought than real estate or industrial skill, that the political convention or stump speaking had more attractions than starting a dairy farm or truck garden.

A ship lost at sea for many days suddenly sighted a friendly vessel. From the mast of the unfortunate vessel was seen the signal: "Water, water; we die of thirst!" The answer from the friendly vessel at once came back: "Cast down your bucket where you are." A second time the signal, "Water, water; send us water!" ran up from the distressed vessel, and was answered: "Cast down your bucket where you are." And a third and fourth signal for water was answered: "Cast down your bucket where you are." The captain of the distressed vessel, at last heeding the injunction, cast down his bucket, and it came up full of fresh, sparkling water from the mouth of the Amazon river. To those of my race who depend on bettering their condition in a foreign land, or who underestimate the importance of cultivating friendly relations with the Southern white man, who is their next door neighbor, I would say, "Cast down your bucket where you are"—cast it down in making friends in every manly way of the people of all races by whom we are surrounded.

Cast it down in agriculture, mechanics, in commerce, in domestic service and in the professions. And in this connection, it is well to bear in mind, that whatever other sins the South may be called to bear, when it comes to business, pure and simple, it is in the South that the negro is given a man's chance in the commercial world, and in nothing is this exposition more eloquent than in emphasizing this chance. Our greatest danger is, that in the great leap from slavery to freedom, we may overlook the fact that the masses of us are to live by the productions of our hands, and fail to keep in mind that we shall prosper in proportion as we learn to dignify and glorify common labor and put brains and skill into the common occupations of life; shall prosper in proportion as we learn to draw the line between the superficial and the substantial, the ornamental gewgaws of life and the useful. No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem. It is at the bottom of life we must begin, and not at the top. Nor should we permit our grievances to overshadow our opportunities.

To those of the white race who look to the incoming of those of foreign birth and strange tongue and habits, for the prosperity of the South, were I permitted, I would repeat what I say to my own race—"Cast down your bucket where you are." Cast it down among the eight million negroes, whose habits you know, whose fidelity and love you have tested in days when to have proved treacherous meant the ruin of your firesides. Cast down your bucket among these people who have, without strikes and labor wars, tilled your fields, cleared your forests, builded your railroads and cities, and brought forth treasures from the bowels of the earth and helped make possible this magnificent representation of the progress of the South. Casting down your bucket among my people, helping encouraging them, as you are doing on these grounds, to education of head, hand and heart, and you will find that they will buy your surplus land, make blossom the waste places in your fields and run your factories. While doing this, you can be sure in the future, as in the past, that you and your families will be surrounded by the most patient, faithful, law abiding and unresentful people that the world has seen. As we have proved our loyalty to you in the past, in nursing your children, watching by the sick bed of your mothers and fathers and often following them with tear-dimmed eyes to their graves, so in the future in our humble way, we shall stand by you with a devotion that no foreigner can approach, ready to lay down our lives, if need be, in defence of yours, interlacing our industrial, commercial, civil and religious life with yours in a way that shall make the interests of both races one. In all things that are purely social we can be as separate as the fingers, yet one as the hand in all things essential to mutual progress.

There is no defence or security for any of us except in the highest intelligence and development of all. If anywhere there are efforts tending to curtail the fullest growth of the negro, let these efforts be turned into stimulating, encouraging and making him the most useful and intelligent citizen. Effort or means so invested will pay a thousand per cent interest. These efforts will be twice blessed —"blessing him that gives and him that takes."

There is no escape through law of man or God, from the inevitable:

"The laws of changeless justice bind,
Oppressor with oppressed;
And close as sin and suffering joined,
We march to fate abreast."

Nearly sixteen millions of hands will aid you in pulling the load upwards, or they will pull against you the load downwards. We shall constitute one-third and more of the ignorance and crime of the South, or one-third its intelligence and progress, we shall contribute one-third to the business and industrial prosperity of the South, or we shall prove a veritable body of death, stagnating, depressing, retarding every effort to advance the body politic.

Gentlemen of the Exposition, as we present to you our humble effort at an exhibition of our progress, you must not expect over much. Starting thirty years ago with ownership here and there in a few quilts and pumpkins and chickens (gathered from miscellaneous sources), remember the path that has led from these to the inventions and production of agricultural implements, buggies, steam engines, newspapers, books, statuary carving, paintings, the management of drugstores and banks, has not been trodden without contact with thorns and thistles. While we take pride in what we exhibit as a result of our independent effort, we do not for a moment forget that our part in this exhibition would fall far short of your expectations but for the constant help that has come to our educational life, not only from the southern states, but especially from northern philanthropists, who have made their gifts a constant stream of blessings and encouragement.

The wisest among my race understand that the agitation of questions of social equality is the extremest folly, and that progress in the enjoyment of all the privileges that will come to us, must be the result of severe and constant struggle, rather than of artificial forcing. No race that has anything to contribute to the markets of the world, is long in any degree ostracised. It is important and right that all privileges of the law be ours, but it is vastly more important that we be prepared for the exercises of these privileges. The opportunity to earn a dollar in a factory, just now, is worth infinitely more than the opportunity to spend a dollar in an opera house.

In conclusion, may I repeat that nothing in thirty years has given us more hope and encouragement, and drawn us nearer to you of the white race, as this opportunity offered by the Exposition and, here bending, as it were, over the altar that represents the results of the struggles of your race and mine, both starting practically empty-handed three decades ago, I pledge that in your effort to work out the grand and intricate problem which God has laid at the doors of the South, you shall have at all times the patient, sympathetic help of my race. Far above and beyond material benefits which will come from this representation will be a higher good, that, let us pray God, will result in a blotting out of all sectional differences and racial animosities and in a willing obedience among all classes to the mandates of the law, which will bring into our beloved South a new heaven and a new earth.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

She wore a light gray coat, and a black hat with a wealth of roses on it, but fair as the roses was the face beneath them.

Her voice was rich and tender, and all eyes were on her, when she said, "Pray for this man, oh, how he needs God."

In response to our invitation she led him down the aisle, and presently both were kneeling at the altar.

The man was but recently out of prison, full of drink, and needing help. Where she found him, no one knows. This much is settled, she "brought him to Jesus."

In conversation with her a little later on, she said:

"I've been in mission work in London, England, and in many other great cities, but I never saw the work so beautifully housed before."

. . . . . .

Rain, snow, wind, these came on like an army, and took the city, but in spite of it hundreds of people gathered in Willard Hall filling every place.

Promptly at noon Mrs. Carse voiced a pathetic prayer, after which, Miss Mary A. Blood, principal of the Columbia School of Oratory, read a short selection from the Book of books.

She is a great-hearted woman, abounding in high ideals, and has a way of writing them deep on the lives of all who come within her realm.

. . . . . .

"Just for to-day," was beautifully sung by Mrs. Cowan, after which, Miss Willard, our queen of hearts, arose to speak.

Everything by way of praise has been spoken of her, and yet I would like to add my mite and say, she impressed me that day as never before, nor was it so much by what she said, as by what she looked. The noble head covered with nut-brown hair, the steadfast gaze, the ringing voice,—the all-ness that marks her as God's own, these moved me strangely.

Inwardly I was full of chidings—ghosts of lost opportunities trooped before me, and far, far away stretched sunlit hills I might never hope to climb. It was the obeisance of my soul to her marvelous personality.

She made a fair picture standing there against a background of rich coloring and marble, a picture set in a sea of upturned faces wet with tears.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

California, 1896!

Dear Union Signal:—Ho, for California and the National W. C. T. U. convention in 1896. The echoes of the splendid Baltimore gathering have just reached us on this sunset coast, and while we rejoice at all the good things and the new things which were brought to such a successful issue there, no tidings pleased us quite so much as the announcement that the next Convention would in all probability meet on the Pacific coast.

Two cities, I believe, are harmoniously vying for this honor, San Francisco and Los Angeles, the former the headquarters of California and the latter of Southern California W. C. T. U. All manner of nice things may be said of each city and of each state union, for our readers well know that California is such an immense territory, (seven hundred miles long) that it contains two state unions. This division was made at the wise suggestion of Miss Willard when she visited this coast in 1883.

If I were in Northern California I fear I would prove human and urge the Convention to go there next year, but as I am for the time being a resident of the southern part of the state, I want to second the cordial invitation of the president and general officers of Southern California to the National W. C. T. U. to come to Los Angeles, the "city of the angels," in 1896.

Californian hearts are so generous that the Convention would be welcomed, if it had not been invited at all, but we doubt if any organization has ever received a more duplicated invitation than has come from this land of flowers and sunshine. Hear the list of would-be hosts and hostesses: First and foremost, the W. C. T. U. of Southern California; second, the "union of unions" of Los Angeles, composed of all the city unions, numbering six; third, the governor of California, Hon. James Budd, by name, who is the first governor of this state who would sign such an invitation; fourth, the Chamber of Commerce in Los Angeles, one of the most important commercial agents of the state; fifth, the ministerial union of Los Angeles, composed of all the clergymen of the city; sixth, the Woman's Club, and seventh, the Woman's Parliament, both of Los Angeles and representing a class of highly cultured and progressive women. Here is a sevenfold invitation. Can you longer doubt your welcome or our ability to entertain you?

Another reason why you should come is that you have never been here—and a still greater one is that you all want to come. I never met any one who did not want to see California, and every one expects to come sooner or later. Why not come now? The nearest you have come to this coast is Denver, and that is "East" to us, fully fifteen hundred miles away. But much as we want you, we would not ask you to cross the Rockies, the great deserts and the Coast Ranges, if we did not have such an exceptional climate and scenery to show you. We warn the National officers to prepare their most attractive program and the states to send their most conscientious delegates, else the hall will be deserted for the fascinating out of door life.

It is probable that the Convention will be held in October. What need you expect to find then? Well, the disagreeable will be mentioned first, and that is, dust! But that need not be magnified, for I have seen more dust on the country roads and village streets of Illinois or Michigan in the season when it ought to rain but doesn't, than here in the season when no rain is expected. Even in the small towns here, where sprinkling is unknown, the dust is not unbearable, for the winds do not blow low and toss it around to any great extent. Of course, with six months of dry weather all the trees do not look perfectly fresh nor all the leaves entirely green, but come and see for yourselves and help to laugh at the story of "dust ten inches deep in California!"

But the delightful things you will find are, first, the climate. It is not a perfect climate, but doubtless the nearest such this side of Paradise. Balmy, invigorating breezes, warm, cheering sunshine (not melting and oppressive), fresh intoning mountain air—such is Southern California's climate. It does not suit everybody, particularly at first acquaintance, for some people, you know, find more fault with conditions the nearer they reach perfection. It is easy to criticise when the faults are so few as to show up like mountain peaks. The scenery is to a prairie dweller full of interest, as all Southern California is composed of mountains and valleys, lowlands and highlands. Coming across the deserts of Arizona and Eastern California one is doubly delighted with the freshness and verdure of the fertile valleys that surround Los Angeles. But he must remember that these were once as arid as the desert just passed until water and industry were applied. Never was husbandry so rewarded as here, and never was it more relentlessly followed. The Californians have added another clause to the beatitudes: "Blessed be industry"—they do not call it "drudgery," for it brings health, wealth and happiness in its train.

And the flowers! You will think me extravagant if I merely mention what will greet your eyes next October—for the longer I write the more certain I grow that you are all coming to Los Angeles next year; if San Francisco is chosen the description will answer almost as well. Roses are always the "stock in trade" here, and you can count varieties till you tire of the process. It is not uncommon to find sixty kinds in one yard, some of them climbing all over the houses. They are large and delicate in color and perfume, and may be had for the asking, though many peculiar people (not white-ribboners) do not even take that trouble! Then there is the chrysanthemum, the gorgeous, lasting beauties that bloom here for months, and in all imaginable shades and nomenclatures. Calla lilies simply run riot, forming division fences, the flower stalks often growing six feet high. Geraniums are beautiful, the bushes growing so large and bearing so prolifically that they are hardly taken into consideration. Heliotrope runs up the sides of the houses to the second story windows, and its delicate perfume vies with that of the wood violets in ladening the air with sweetness. To the spicy odor of the carnation is added the pungent perfume of the tube rose and the aromatic flavor of the oleander and the magnolia. But why attempt the well-nigh endless enumeration of the flora of this wonderful land! Come and see it for yourselves.

Oranges and California are almost synonymous terms. October is not the season for our best fruit, but the remains of the orange, peach, pear, fig and grape crops will be sufficient to show what we can raise. If you want to see the state in all its tropical beauty, you must arrange to stay all winter, and see the orange and lemon blossoms, and taste the delicious fruit.

There is little doubt that the convention will be largely attended if the railroad rates are made sufficiently low. The white-ribbon women on this coast realize that the expense of getting here is a great problem, but they will do all in their power, acting in conjunction with the National railroad committee, to secure reduced fare. The regular round-trip tickets from Chicago to Los Angeles are one hundred dollars, but they have often been as low as fifty-five dollars, and in the fall of the year, when tourists are coming in large numbers, it is hoped that we will have every advantage of reductions. Of course this matter will receive prompt attention from the proper authorities, and be announced in ample season.

Personally it will be a pleasure of the highest order to greet here upon the soil of my adopted state the many friends who have sent me messages of sympathy and cheer from the Baltimore Convention, and to serve them as best I may in suggestions for the comfort of the journey should the wise decision be, "Los Angeles and the National in 1896."

Yours faithfully,

Margaret A Sudduth.

W. C. T. U. DAY AT THE ATLANTA EXPOSITION.

Dear Union Signal:—Our day, November 5, was a success, and it may safely be said that good seed was planted of whose fruitage only the future can tell. The meeting was held in Assembly Hall in the Woman's Building. The room was decorated with banners sent from the National Convention, and many local banners from Georgia.

Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, local chairman and president of the fifth district in Georgia, in an appropriate speech presented the chairman of the morning and first speaker, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson. Mrs. Stevenson gave a brief history of the organization, and its work from the day when the women of Hillsboro started the great crusade movement up to the present time. Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp then gave an interesting and forcible address on the subject, "A Glance over the Field of Woman's Development." Mrs. W. C. Sibley, president of the Georgia state W. C. T. U., No. 1, gave a little history of the work in Georgia. Mrs. Ormsby and Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols also gave brief addresses. Afterwards a little experience meeting filled in the time until the hour of adjournment, one p. m. A number of white-ribboners in few words gave touching testimonies as to what the W. C. T. U. had done for them.

The afternoon session opened at two o'clock. Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp presided. Mrs. Nichols' address on "Woman and Temperance" was very fine, and calculated to arouse much temperance sentiment. Mrs. Stevenson also gave a stirring address on "Woman's Relation to the Church."

While the circumstances of these congresses, held, as they are, upon the exposition grounds, thus necessitating the payment of the admission fee by all who wish to attend them, seriously affect the attendance, the congress of the W. C. T. U. was quite as well attended as the generality of congresses. We could wish that multitudes might have heard the strong and forceful arguments, the descriptions of the work accomplished and now going on, the convincing statement for the "faith that is in us," as given by these gifted leaders of our organization. But though the seed was not planted in a large field, we are sure that it was upon good ground and will bear a rich harvest. No one can tell into whose heart Mrs. Stevenson's earnest words, urging that every Christian woman belongs in the ranks of the W. C. T. U., may have fallen, what workers may be raised up as a result.

ADVANTAGE OF PROHIBITION IN KANSAS.

Dear Union Signal:—I am indebted to the Topeka Daily Capital for the following facts and they are facts and not opinions. I wish to say first that our prohibitory law does not pretend to prohibit drinking; the advocates of prohibition have never denied the legal right of a man to take a drink if it is on sale, but they have endeavored to make it as hard for him to get as possible, by prohibiting the sale of it in the state.

The law has not been a failure. We have thousands of happier homes because of it. The people of the state were never more strongly in favor of prohibition than they are to-day. Every measure introduced by the Resubmissionists to the legislature last winter was promptly voted down.

In 1880, just before the enforcement of prohibition. Kansas had lands assessed at $87,000,000; ten years later their value had advanced to $170,000,000—ninety-five per cent. In 1870 the assessed valuation of all property in Kansas was $92,000,000; ten years later it was $160,000,000, an increase of less than seventy-six per cent. Eight years later it had risen to more than $353,000,000, an increase per annum under prohibition twice as great as before prohibition was adopted—in fact, a growth in eight years of 120 per cent.

In 1880 Kansas numbered 996,096 souls. Nine years later the census showed a population of 1,494,000, a growth during a period of poor crops, the incurring of debts for the development of farms, and during world-wide hard times, of fifty per cent.

School statistics speak for the prosperity of the state, for its intelligence, ambition and patriotism, or tell of the absence of these qualities, perhaps as well as any other facts that might be related. In 1878 Kansas had enrolled 177,806 school children. To-day we have 403,351, and the average daily attendance has enormously increased.

Under the era of prohibition the average salaries of teachers has increased, for male teachers, from $32.47 to $41.01, something over twenty-six per cent, and the average salary of female teachers has advanced from $25.98 to $34.64, over thirty-three per cent. School property has advanced in value during the same period from $4,633,000 to $8,608,000. Schoolhouses have increased from 5,315 to 8,196.

We do not claim that prohibition is absolutely enforced. No law to restrict or abolish the liquor traffic ever has been.

The Kansas W. C. T. U. was active and efficient in the hard work that secured the beneficent laws that are now on the Kansas statutes.

Yours for prohibition,

LURENDA B. SMITH,

GUNBOATS, WAR, PEACE.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—In considering the bids for some new gunboats at Washington a few days ago, that of the Detroit Dry Dock Company was thrown out because, under the United States compact with England, neither nation are to build boats on the lakes. The public think nothing of this. The city of Detroit, Mich., has not gone off in rebellion. Every one is perfectly satisfied that it is all right. If it is all right, it certainly is so because it is either the will of God or common sense, or both. Now why can not England and America set an example by making a compact not to build war vessels on any of their shores, or at least to restrict the number, and then get the other six main nations to follow them, or, if possible, to join with them? I believe it would be perfectly feasible if the Christian men of these nations would actively work for it. I am sure the women would do so. If the Christian men of England, Germany, Russia, Austria, Italy, France, Japan and the United States were to demand it, it would come; therefore, to my mind, as they do not, a terrible responsibility rests upon them. A great war will probably be the result of non-attention to this subject. This preventive measure will not, cannot be brought about by one man, or one ruler; the responsibility is too great for even the Emperor of Germany or the Czar of Russia to do it; in fact, both have been tried. I am very certain, as I have it from high authority. Like other tempted sinners, the nations will gradually be entrapped through Chinese, or other troubles, and will be engaged in war almost before we are aware of it. Is it not obligatory upon all Christian believers to do all they can to keep peace and to prepare for His coming? Let us preach physical peace among ourselves and to the world, and let the potsherds of the earth do their own striving.

ANOTHER HEROINE!

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Having read in your paper of Lady Henry Somerset's courage in having her son's twenty-first birthday celebrated without intoxicants, I wish to tell an incident of greater moral courage which happened in Australia while I was there.

Among the "upper strata" of society in the city of Melbourne, the custom prevailed of having intoxicating drinks at all dinners, banquets and receptions. The result was that all the late American consuls became so enslaved that, being unfit to transact business, they were reported to the home government, and removed one by one. At last one was sent whose wife was a white-ribboner. The W. C. T. U. captured her as soon as possible, and secured her influence in the organization. At her husband's first Fourth of July reception no intoxicants were served, though in this she stood alone among the circle in which she moved, not even her husband being a total abstainer.

It took no little courage to deviate from the customs of society in a strange land, among those who had kindly taken her into their companionship. Yet with the same dauntless spirit of our beloved Mrs. Hayes she stood firmly for the right, and thus became a reprover of evil. Since returning home I have received a letter from a dear friend, saying: "Mr. and Mrs. Wallace have held another reception without wines or other intoxicants."

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—We will wind up the Special Difficulties in hand this week and next week proceed to other matters.

Q.—What is reformatory work in the local union as distinguished from educational work?

A.—Send for an Annual Leaflet—issued by the N. W. C. T. U. It explains the departmental plan of our work in full.

Q.—May a woman who has paid twenty-five dollars life-membership dues in one state be considered a paying member in any state in the Union?

A.—She becomes life member of the National only. In state, county and local union her membership is subject to the same conditions as others.

Q.—Please give us some suggestions for opening a sewing-school.

A.—First, mature your plans as fully as possible before advertising them outside of the union. That is, determine where you will hold the school, on what day, whom you can secure as teachers, etc. Arrange for a preliminary meeting with the mothers. You can reach many of these through the children attending the Sunday-schools, and perhaps the day schools. A printed invitation addressed to the mothers, setting forth the aims of the industrial school, would be a good thing. At this preliminary meeting, have a frank, friendly talk with your audience. Your own motherly hearts will tell you what to say. Once they are assured that their children will be safe in your care and learning some practical lessons, there will be little or no trouble in securing the presence of the children. If your audience is composed of mothers from the humbler walks of life, a little lunch of hot tea and coffee, sandwiches and plain cake will do much to win their confidence and coöperation.

Have on hand for the first meeting of the sewing school a supply of little thimbles, needles and thread, pieces, etc.

Try to have chairs low enough for the little ones. Every child's feet should touch the floor, even for a two hours' sewing school once a week.

Begin each session with stirring temperance songs and gospel hymns, followed by a short talk to the children. These talks may be on a variety of topics. Make them practical, remembering always you are educating future home-makers and citizens.

Once a month or once in two months let the children give a reception to their mothers. At this reception they can sing and recite; their work may be on exhibition, each piece labeled with child's name and age; a light lunch of tea and wafers, or fruit might be served, the children acting as waiters.

Hold the mothers through the children and keep ever in view that there are principles of temperance and purity to be inculcated that will tell for time and eternity.

Q.—Should a woman who is heart and soul for temperance, but not a member of the W. C. T. U., wear the white ribbon?

A.—The white ribbon means membership in the W. C. T. U., and membership means signing the pledge and paying dues.

Q.—What shall we call members who are earnest and devoted workers in W. C. T. U. lines, but have an abhorrence to a pledge, and refuse to sign one?

A.—You cannot call them white-ribboners or members of the W. C. T. U. Labor with them in love till they are won over.

Q.—Should a union in a country village not "educated up" to prohibition, discuss politics or draw the line of membership to exclude those who do not favor prohibition?

A.—I turn to our Annual Leaflet for answer, and find that the W. C. T. U. "is an organization of Christian women banded together for the protection of the home, the abolition of the liquor system, and the triumph of Christ's Golden Rule in custom and in law." This, together with the basis of membership specified in the foregoing answer, ought to be clear enough to aid in "drawing the line." The W. C. T. U. is committed to prohibition, and no individual union can exist and ignore the topic, and those who apply for membership ought to clearly understand the raison d'être of the society, and then act on their best judgment

Faithfully yours,

Mother Experience.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you.—John 15:7.

Mrs. Annie James, Harrismith, Orange Free State, South Africa, sends £21 to place the name of her late husband in Willard Hall. He is worthy of a place in our Temperance Westminster, as he has been an earnest worker in the great reform. We like to get money from the rich, but it seems so much more precious when it is given by those whose means are limited and who have to deny themselves to give. Mrs. S. J. Blain, Page, Neb., sends $100, which she wishes to go towards the $300,000 we are raising. Mrs. Blain is the wife of an M. E. pastor on a circuit in last year's drought-stricken portion of Nebraska. She is the president of a W. C. T. U. She writes that she is trying to get the union interested in filling Wheels. Think of it, white-ribboners, you who have ample means. If in our ranks three thousand women would send a check for $100, as this dear white-ribboner in Nebraska has done, the $300,000 we are working for would be secured, and we would hold the title deed of the Temple.

The Central W. C. T. U. of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has sent for 100 Wheels. This is due to the interest in the Temple manifested by one faithful woman—Mrs. Amelia Yeomans, vice-president of the union. She sent a little time ago for half-a-dozen Wheels, and succeeded so well in getting them filled that she proposed to the Winnipeg union that they raise $100 for the Temple, and have the name of their union inscribed in Willard Hall. They were unanimously in favor of it, and are now busily engaged in filling Wheels. If white-ribboners in far-away Manitoba can thus labor for the "House Beautiful," what excuse can hundreds of unions nearer home give for their seeming lack of interest in the matter? An aged member of a certain union in the state of New York, writes: "I believe the money you wish raised to make the Temple ours will be forthcoming. Some members of our union want to see whether it can be raised, but I will send mine ($5) now." It may be the above mentioned unions are like the one referred to by our sister. I ask in all kindness, Is such holding off just? If all white-ribboners would either give or raise $5 each, as our aged friend has (and her means are very limited), the Temple would be paid for in short order. Can't you, won't you, dear sisters, each try to do your part? "God won't help those who won't help themselves." We believe there is not a woman so poor, or in such humble circumstances, in all our ranks, but could, if she would, collect $5 for the Temple.

McKean county, Pa., W. C. T. U., through Mrs. Mary E. Field, sends $56.50 on their pledge. Of this amount Bradford W. C. T. U. sends $44, Smethport union $5, Duke Center L. T. L. $5, and Dallas City L. T. L., $2.50. Mrs. Frances A. Olmsted sends $31, the last payment on the hundred dollar pledge of the Burlington, Vt., W. C. T. U. This noble woman has worked hard to finish the payment of the union's pledge. She says, however, she is going to keep right on helping to lift the debt. She adds: "We must do it, that is all there is about it." The El Modena, Cal., W. C. T. U., through Miss E. Jenkins, treasurer, sends $25, which completes the payment of their hundred dollar pledge. Mrs. Laura Cunningham sends $15 on the pledge of the Good Will, South Dakota union. Mrs. Emma Kiefer sends $12.27, which completes the hundred dollar pledge of Mount Carmel, Pa., W. C. T. U.

The Lordstown, O., union send $10, and a like amount is sent by the W. C. T. U. of South China, Me.; $11.60 comes from the Pataskala, Ohio, W. C. T. U. Miss Ellen Dickinson sends $6, which completes the one hundred dollar pledge of the Grand Ridge, Ill., W. C. T. U. This faithful superintendent of Temple work has done nobly. She is now filling more Wheels. We desire to record the faithfulness of Mrs. Clara S. Harza, state superintendent of Temple work for South Dakota, and Mrs. F. B. Kerney, state superintendent of Temple work for Nebraska. Both have sent out printed circulars and done everything in their power to aid the Temple. Mrs. Harza truly says: "I do not think the women realize the importance of this work or what it means to our great organization to have the Temple paid for."

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

TO THE RESCUE.

BY W. A. JONES.

Lost! lost! lost! A little child
Has wandered far in the forest wild;
The clouds hang black and the wind is high,
The night draws on and the startling cry,
"Lost! lost! lost!" through the village rings,
'Till each father and son to the rescue springs;
And a hundred men, with weapon and light,
Will scour the woods through the stormy night,
And, oh! what joy when the village bell
Peals the signal: "Found, and all is well!"

Lost! lost! lost! The wilds of sin
A priceless soul has just entered in;
Through the darkness pierces no cheering ray,
And bogs and pitfalls beset his way.
"Lost! lost! lost!" Will no one heed
The cry of a soul so sore in need?
Quick, Christians, quick to the rescue spring,
And back from the wilds that lost soul bring!
And, oh! what joy through the heavens will swell,
At the signal: "Found! and all is well!"

SHE TRUSTED.

A True Story.

BY MARIE J. HESSE.

She was a small attenuated body with a pale face and determined eyes, and when she divided the last morsel of food between her children, she pressed her lips tightly together for a moment but held her head erect. On seeing expectancy settle on the little bowed heads as they waited for the customary blessing, she bowed her head also and returned thanks, "Bless this food to our use and us to Thy service." Her voice was firm and cold when she began but a slight tremor crept into the well known words at its close. With the quick perception of childhood, the little band noticed it and John, the oldest, looked keenly into his mother's face and read the distress which she wished to conceal.

"Are you sick, mother dear?" he asked anxiously, as he pressed her to sit down.

"No, no, I'm not sick, only a little weak, I'll be better when I've eaten a bite," she said reassuringly. The younger children were satisfied but John watched his mother narrowly and the first opportunity sought her alone. He threw his young strong arms about her neck and tried to kiss away the troubled look on her face.

"Oh, little mother, something is wrong. Is father worse or dead? Oh, tell me, mother, won't you?"

Mrs. Porter looked into the flushed, anxious face so full of sympathy for her, that she kissed him and said, "Yes, John, my son, you are old enough to understand and you can help me bear this. Dear papa will never come back to us again. His mind is hopelessly diseased and he will never know and love us again. Death is his only release. We must learn to care for ourselves. We are so poor, John, but we must be brave and earn the money for bread somehow. If I only knew what to do," she said hopelessly.

"Oh, mamma," cried the boy, "why didn't you tell me long ago?"

"I could not," said his mother. "I have hoped against hope that papa would be well again, but it must be God's will. The doctor says his life may go out at any time; even now, while I am speaking, he may be dying. Oh, it is so hard, so hard!" she whispered.

She wiped away the tears from the boy's face and soothed him till the voices of the other children sounded near at hand.

"Help mamma," she whispered to him, "by taking care of the little ones for a while. Take them up the mountain road, and interest them till I call. I must be alone to think it out; go, my son."

It was a lovely Sabbath morning. The church bells pealed out joyously on the clear air, but they found no response in Mrs. Porter's heart; she felt so rebellious they only clanged unharmonious in her ears. Her mind was full of bitter questionings against God's will. What had she done that she should be so chastened? Why was her husband torn from her side and her life crushed?

She had builded better; she had worked and saved and prayed, but her husband's unfortunate speculations had swept it away in a day. He had been driven to insanity, leaving her a stranger in a strange land, homeless, and almost houseless. The small reserve had dwindled away, and she knew not where the next meal was to come from.

While she sat taking account of her misfortunes, a messenger brought a telegram, bearing these words: "Died this morning."

It was too much. She could not feel God's presence; she groped in darkness, not even crying for help. But at last she fell upon her face and piteously cried as did the Saviour in His darkest hour of agony, "My God, why hast Thou forsaken me!"

She knew not how long she lay thus almost in a stupor. Then she rose and staggered to her room and took down the dust-covered Bible, which in her over anxiety for daily bread she had neglected. She opened the book and read, "Trust in the Lord and do good, and thou shalt dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed." She saw and heard nothing else; she repeated the words slowly over and over until they were burned into her very soul.

"Oh!" she whispered, "that promise may be for me, too —Trust in the Lord—and thou shalt be fed—only trust—trust Him. Oh! I can do that, and my children shall be fed!" She was filled with the words of the promise, but a sense of guilt oppressed her and she fell upon her knees and poured out her soul in supplication to be forgiven for her faithlessness, and her bitter rebellion. She arose from her knees and walked to the open door. The world had taken on a new aspect. She heard the birds sing, the first time in weeks, the joyous rustling of the trees. The children's voices sounded merry and all the world seemed to respond to the peace within her heart.

She turned to the Bible again and read the promise over; she held the book reverently in her hand though she read no more. While she sat enjoying the peace after the wild storm, into her mind flashed the thought of an old chest, which had stood in the garret for twenty years. Why she should think of it then she did not know, but a strong impulse to look into it came over her. She went to it and opened its rusty lock; in it were stored some scrap books made in days of greater leisure. The first book was yellow with age and its pages emitted a musty odor as she turned them. Her eye fell upon a newspaper cutting, a recipe for laundrying lace curtains. She read it over carefully; "God be praised! I can do that," she exclaimed, "and by His help I will," she added.

The next morning she went among her acquaintances and announced her intention. She was surprised to find it a long felt want that had never been supplied. Work came in fast and so daintily did she do it that her fame was carried afar.

There were many discouragements but Mrs. Porter steadfastly refused to recognize them. She said she had God's promise that if she trusted Him, she should not want bread. God prospered her and her children are blessing the world with earnest Christian lives. One is an inventor whose name is known to the world, another is known and loved by the children for her delightful stories.

The sweet little mother is now an invalid and sits with folded hands but never tires of telling of God's goodness to her.

FROM THE CRADLE TO THE GRAVE.

BY SARAH M. HALTOUGH.

I.

"I am so glad our baby is a girl. Now all those dainty, short-sleeved, low-necked little dresses that I made for our first baby can be used. Harold never wore one of them," and the speaker turned her head and looked at the tiny bundle lying so still on the pillow by her side, fondled the wee fingers, and felt the satiny covering of the little round head. "Do you think," she continued, "that she will be plump and fair? I do admire a plump, fair girl. Harold is so muscular."

The person addressed, a middle-aged relative, expressed the opinion that in all probability the atom might develop in plumpness and fairness.

"White, plump shoulders are so pretty in a girl. And I mean she shall wear low-necked and short-sleeved dresses always if she is plump and white. One can dress little girls so much prettier than little boys."

The young mother was soon asleep, and the middle-aged relative had her own thoughts as she softly moved about the chamber, now adjusting the window shade and tucking the covering snugly about the tiny form that lay so oblivious to its future.

II.

Two children are being made ready to attend a birthday party.

"You will not allow Isabel to go out so thinly clad, will you?"

"Oh, yes!" said the mother. "Isabel is accustomed to this mode of dressing. She has warm underclothes on. She is to wear her cloak and fur tippet, and will be very comfortable. Isabel, dear, remember you are not to go out of doors, nor play too hard and get overheated, nor sit near an open door. Harold, you must take care of her, and see that she does not forget what I am telling her."

"Yes, mamma, but why doesn't sister have warm clothes like mine. She always goes shivering about and looking cold with her bare neck."

"Sister is comfortable. Girls don't need to wear such warm clothes as boys. Now, go and have a good time, my dears."

Very beautiful indeed looked the dainty Isabel in her white cashmere; sleeves and neck trimmed with swan's down and cut to display the perfect neck and arms. Low white shoes and silken hose completed a toilet not well adapted to a winter afternoon; and in strong contrast to the warm, comfortable garments that covered her brother from chin to toes.

III.

"Isabel is growing too stout. Her figure will be ruined. She must be fitted with corsets. Every girl ought to wear them at her age. Isabel is eleven, you must remember."

"But she is none too stout," responded the middle-aged relative, pleadingly. "Better let her have her freedom as long as you can, and she does enjoy roaming about with Harold. She is but a child."

"I know; but then she is getting rude and boisterous already because she is with him so much, and her complexion is almost ruined. I so often wish both my children were girls. They would be so much company for me, and then I could dress them alike, too."

The corsets were bought and the undeveloped form of the little girl was encased in them. The out-of-door sports were prohibited, or modified, and the little Isabel was reminded every day that her complexion would be "ruined" if the sun and wind were allowed to play pranks with it any longer.

But Isabel cared less for her complexion than for the delightful out-of-door times with her brother, and spent many an unhappy hour wishing she were a boy and had no form or complexion to care for.

The years the boy spent gathering strength and health for the future, in exercising his muscles in the open air, were spent by his sister in learning to paint and dance and in the study of music, while the "dainty form" was looked after by a fashionable dressmaker under the supervision of the fond, foolish mother.

IV.

Nineteen! Isabel is graduated from a famous seminary and pronounced a brilliant young lady. She is tall, slender, graceful and delicate. A few years of pleasure and excitement, late hours and gay company and the aim of life in her mother's eye was accomplished. Isabel is well married and a star in society.

A few years as a brilliant leader in society, then Isabel's health began to fail and in a short time she had become a sofa invalid. Gradually her strength failed, the hectic spot on her cheek deepened, her step became slower and soon it was apparent to all that her condition was serious.

Harold, strong, robust and rosy, had studied medicine and was called to advise with other physicians as to the condition of his sister. All agreed that her malady was deep-seated and dangerous. Then began a series of journeyings to and fro to find the priceless treasure of health of which she had been robbed. No money was spared in this vain search. She grew weaker and weaker. She had "no constitution" they said.

"Take me home and let me die," she said one day. "You are only prolonging my agony by taking me everywhere in the vain quest of health. Take me home." So she was brought home by her husband, never to go out from the loved place again until carried by loving hands.

"I cannot understand it!" cried the poor stricken mother. "My Isabel so frail and ill, while you, Harold, are so strong. But girls, I suppose, are of weaker constitution."

Harold walked to the window and looked out. He had his thoughts but could not speak them to his mother. The relative—grown old now—felt a mighty uprising within her. But she too, forebore to speak.

The days went wearily by until one May morning when time ended for sweet Isabel, and a home was desolate and three babes were motherless.

Society attempted to solve the mystery of such an act of "Providence." So much beauty, wealth and happiness to be cut off was incomprehensible. Why was not one taken who had less to live for? Why, indeed?

Leavenworth, Kan.

If you could once make up your mind in the fear of God never to undertake more work of any sort than you can carry on calmly, quietly, without hurry or flurry, and the instant you feel yourself growing nervous and like one out of breath, would stop and take breath, you will find this simple, common sense rule doing for you what no prayers or tears could ever accomplish.—Elizabeth Prentiss.

HEAR THE WHIP CRACK.

Listen! hear the whip crack on the poor creature's back,
As he goes through the streets of the city;
It would cause one to weep, were thoughts not asleep,
Or the heart dead to all sense of pity.

In the rain, in the snow, when winter winds blow,
His endurance is tested severely;
In the heat, in the cold, when young, or when old,
He must yet draw the same burdens yearly.

He is noble and proud, and he would, if allowed,
Truly not only serve you, but love you;
You should feel deep remorse if you ill-treat your horse,
Useful gift of the Master above you.

THE FIRST SNOW.

In the land of orange blossoms,
Where the figs and banyans grow,
Dwelt a little Southern maiden,
Who had never seen it snow.

Visiting her Northern cousins—
From the gray November skies,
For the first time falling snowflakes
Met her startled, wondering eyes.

In excitement, to her mother
Straight this little maiden sped:
"Mamma! quick! Do see the angels
Emptying their feather bed!"

WHY BENNY DREADS THE PITCHER.

BY HELEN SOMERVILLE.

Benny is a brave boy, but there is one thing he positively dreads, and that is a certain pitcher. It is thick and large and ugly, and is nicked around the edge.

But this is not why Benny dislikes it so much. No, there is another reason.

Now Benny is a real boy, and lives in one of our western towns down in "the bottoms." You children who live in Chicago and other large cities, know something about the "slums," where people live in great misery, and where most of them are very wicked. The "bottoms" are like the "slums," and if you could see that part of the town where Benny lives, you would feel more thankful than ever that you have a pleasant home, and kind friends who love you.

But why does Benny dread the pitcher? Because his father and mother drink beer, and this pitcher is used to carry home the awful stuff that makes them ugly and cross so that often they quarrel and fight.

When Benny was quite young, he understood that in some way or other the stuff that came out of this pitcher was the cause of the quarreling, and he would tremble when he saw it come home filled to the brim.

After a while he was old enough to go himself for the beer, and every evening he was sent on this disgraceful errand.

But one evening something happened. Benny refused to go for the beer. They had just arisen from their scanty supper and the little boy was wishing he had had more when his mother pointed to the old pitcher, saying,

"Go 'long quick, Benny boy; I'm awful dry. Now don't dally."

Benny turned pale, but said firmly, "No, ma, I'm not goin' for beer, never no more."

His mother scowled, and said, "Go quick, I tell ye! No nonsense! Do you hear me?" And she raised her arm as if she would strike him.

Taking hold of her dress the child said, in a coaxing voice, "Ma, don't ask me, for I can't go. You know I've been goin' to the meetin's at the church, and they say it's bad to drink beer. There's a verse that says, 'Look not upon the wine—' "

Before he could finish, his mother's strong arm fell heavily on to his shoulder, and with an oath, she cried, "Don't talk of meetin's to me, lad. I won't stand it! Are ye goin' now?"

Benny trembled, but he said, as firmly as ever, "No, I can't."

Down came the cruel blows thick and fast on the poor, thinly clad little shoulders.

Benny's cries attracted the attention of his father, who had stepped out, and who now came in, saying, "What's all this to-do?"

The angry mother looked up, saying sullenly, "This precious boy of ours has seen fit to say no when I tell him to go to the j'int for beer. This goin' to meetin' is a great thing, Tom. The lad won't mind his mother!"

The boy looked up through his tears, and noticed that his father was looking not unkindly at him.

"Let go, Elsie. You've been at that long enough. The little chap's more near right than we are. If he don't want to go for beer, I'll go myself."

"Oh, pa!" implored the boy, taking hold of his father's hand. "Don't get any beer to-night. Come to meetin' with me, and learn to be a good man. The preacher will be glad to see you, and the singin's just fine."

"No, no, Benny, church goin's out of my line, but you can go, and it wouldn't hurt you, Elsie, to go."

The mother turned angrily away. "Go 'long with you, Tom. As for you, boy, you'd better learn to mind your mother. Pretty teachin' you're gettin' at meetin'. You've got off easy this time, but I tell you it's the last time."

Snatching up his cap Benny slipped off to the little church, where he joined with the others in singing the hymns he loved.

After the sermon, the minister called for some one to lead in prayer, and high and clear rose the voice of little Benny.

"O Lord Jesus, help me, a poor little boy, and oh! do help my father and mother. Don't let them drink beer. Don't let the folks at the j'int sell beer. It's awful hard times at our place, Jesus, and nobody can't help us out but you. Amen."

I hope some day to be able to write a bright ending to this sad little story, and to tell that the old pitcher never goes for beer and that Benny has a happy home.

Children, will you not all pray, too, for Benny's father and mother, that they will become followers of the Lord Jesus, so that they will not have a craving for the dreadful beer which causes so much unhappiness?

WHAT PUZZLED MARGERY.

This is Margery's first year in school, and she is greatly interested in everything that occurs. One day recently she came home at noon greatly excited.

"Oh, mamma," she said, "what do you think? Our teacher stopped right in the middle of a music lesson, and asked us how many turnips there are in a bushel. We just couldn't understand what that had to do with our music."

Mamma couldn't understand it, either; and, the more positive Margery grew about the matter, the more mamma felt she must be mistaken. Finally, to satisfy her own mind, one morning when she met the teacher, Margery's mamma asked her what she meant by asking the children how many turnips there were in a bushel, during a music lesson.

The teacher, too, was just as puzzled as Margery had been.

"Why, surely, I didn't ask such a question as that," she said. Then, after thinking a moment, she exclaimed, laughing,—

"Why, I asked the children how many beats there were in a measure!"

Margery's mind had done the rest.—The Myrtle.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I heard such a good story recently of a bright Scotch temperance boy that I want to tell it to you. This boy's father was, like so many in the "land of barleycorn," fond of whisky, much to the distress and unhappiness of his wife and son.

One morning, on awakening, the father told at the breakfast table a curious dream that he had during the night.

He dreamed that he saw a big, fat rat coming towards him, followed by two lean ones, and another, a blind one, in the rear.

Being superstitious, he was greatly worried over it, and thought that it was the warning of some great evil. He had heard that to dream of rats was the sign of a coming calamity.

His wife could not explain away his fears. But his boy, who had been listening intently, looked up and said:

"I think I can tell you what it means, father."

The father, who was sober for once, said:

"What do you think, son?"

To which the bright boy replied:

"The fat rat is the man who keeps the public house where you go so often, and the two lean ones are mother and me, and the blind one is yourself, father!"

Wasn't that a good explanation of the dream? I shouldn't be surprised if that father ever after had the vision of the rats when passing some tempting public house or bar and thought of the real evil that would befall him in the complete loss of body and soul, should he continue to follow blindly in the rear.

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

SHE KNOWS WHEN TO SAY "NO."

My grandma is a temperance woman. I am a temperance girl. Grandma often reads letters to me from the Cozy Corner. As I am so interested in them, thought I would write one. I have a kitty; her name is Topsy. She wears a blue ribbon around her neck, as much as to say, "I am a temperance kitty." Not long ago I was at a dinner where they passed claret. When asked if I would have some I said. "No, thank you, I am a temperance girl." I guess I will write another letter soon.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

If you were at the Baltimore Convention, you have eagerly awaited its echo in the Convention number of THE UNION SIGNAL, which is doubly valuable this year, from the fact that the DAILY UNION SIGNAL was not published as in previous years.

As you have read, you have perhaps caught again the inspiration of that magnificent gathering, not alone of white-ribboners, but of profound thinkers on every line of reform, gray-haired men and women attracted by this convention of the brightest leaders of the day,—young men and maidens drawn thither by the grand chorus of college girls, and the exquisite music of a voice never before heard in convention; surpassingly sweet in itself but sweeter far, from the kinship of the beautiful Mrs. Baldwin to our beloved president, whose pride and pleasure as she presented her niece to the enthusiastic audience was shared by all white-ribboners.

Mrs. Baldwin's singing was a feature of the occasion which cannot be reproduced even in imagination, and as the most brilliant program loses much without the music, so the Convention number lacks the inspiration of the voice which in clear, ringing tones filled the vast hall with the stirring notes of "The White Ribbon Star Spangled Banner."

You will find the words which were written by Miss Kate Lunden on page 2 of the Convention issue, and a trifling investment of five cents each will enable you to supply your local choruses, and thus help to make it indeed a National White Ribbon Song.

This number of THE UNION SIGNAL has twenty-four pages. Multiply that number by sixty-five thousand and you will approximate the power of an organ, which in one issue sends forth more than a million and a half pages of condensed wisdom and information upon "every question in which humanity is to-day interested." On page 7, under the heading, "Schools and Parliamentary Usage," note Mrs. Benjamin's words:

"In reviewing the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union with our present purposes and plans one would touch almost every question that to-day agitates the world, and would include nearly the entire gamut of human needs. In these days of clubs we are not simply a literary club, but a literary, scientific, philanthropic, economic, æsthetic, ethical and good government club all combined. We are a foreign missionary society, a home missionary society and an aid society all in one."

The truth of all she says is emphasized by this special Convention number, and we are confident if you will order extra numbers, that you may place them in the hands of your friends and neighbors, you cannot fail to enkindle and intensify interest and zeal in the work of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

It is wise to send in your orders at once, for so aggressive is the work, that this number will soon be a thing of the past, and new plans and advance movements will claim attention.

PRINCIPLES AND PARTIES.

The platforms of the two leading political parties of New York concerning the excise law, in connection with the newspaper comments, make interesting reading. It is profitable for any one who wishes to make a study of the object and aims of these parties, for in this struggle we see epitomized that which goes on in every state and on the border field where the battle is waged for national supremacy.

The Republican convention declared in its platform in "favor of the maintenance of the Sunday laws in the interest of labor and morality." This seems straightforward and explicit, and we should certainly give it our unqualified approval as a manly and honest statement of policy were it not for the doubt which is cast upon its meaning by certain Republican leaders and papers. According to these exponents of Republican political creed, the plank means merely that so long as the Sunday laws remain upon the statute books, the Republican party is pledged to their enforcement; it does not prevent the repeal of those laws by a Republican legislature. Evidently in the minds of these politicians "a platform is something to get in on, not something to stand on," and we should be forced to catechise each candidate of the party before feeling at all sure what said plank would practically mean to a Republican legislature.

The Democratic plank is skillfully worded to suit the views of all whom it may concern. We give it entire:

"Equal and honest enforcement of all laws, a proper observation of a day of rest, and an orderly Sunday; modifications or repeal of laws unsupported by public opinion; no unjust sumptuary laws; no blue laws; recognition of the fundamental American principle of freedom of conscience; home rule in excise, as well as in other matters within reasonable limitations established to protect the interests of temperance and morality, and an amendment of the excise and other laws by the legislature of the state which shall permit each municipality expressing its sentiments, by a popular vote of a majority of its citizens, to determine within such proper legislative restrictions as shall be required by the interests of the entire state what may best suit its special necessities and conditions."

A careful reading of the above will show that such qualifying expressions as "within reasonable limitations" and "within such proper legislative restrictions," make the plank sufficiently broad to admit of persons of decidedly different views standing upon it without crowding one another off. The comments of the Democratic press upon the plank can hardly be said to turn a blaze of electric light upon either this statement in particular or the attitude of the party in general upon any specific issue. One paper says that "it involves all there is of difference between Democracy and Republicanism. Democracy stands for personal liberty and home rule; Republicanism stands for arbitrary and Puritanical government from the outside, for the denial of personal liberty and for the government of municipalities by powers out of sympathy with their needs and conditions." From this we might reasonably conclude that the Democratic party was committed to the policy of local option for such questions as the Sunday law and the regulation of the liquor traffic. But this conclusion is negatived by another Democratic paper which comments thus upon the same subject: "To our mind it would have been much better to maintain the traditional Democratic principle [italics ours] of a uniform excise law, and the idea that so vital a question is inseparable from the authority of the state." And neither so does their witness "agree together."

Two papers have, however, in our judgment, expressed the situation admirably; one an Independent paper which says, "The Sunday plank leaves much to be desired in the point of clearness"; the other a Democratic paper whose comment is, "The delicate excise question is handled admirably, and in such a way as, while attracting thousands of votes, will not drive away from our ranks other thousands." To one acquainted with the ways of political parties, these two statements will not seem contradictory or even paradoxical. Exactly similar comments may be truthfully made concerning the national platforms of the two leading political parties. So carefully and equivocally do they express themselves upon the issues which divide men to-day, that the average voter would not know it if the two platforms should be interchanged. What then are political parties for? We remember in old times that when the school committee visited the public schools, more children "went down" on the question, "What do you go to school for?" than on any question in the three R's. We apprehend that the average "uncrowned king" of America would find the above question one of the most difficult in the science of government. The statesman will say that in a republic it is necessary that the people have opportunity to express their views on the great questions of government that the best judgment of the greatest number may be formulated into law. To give the people such opportunity, is the function of political parties. Each party is supposed to represent the views of some class of people on the great issues of the day and is pledged, if it receives the indorsement of the majority of voters, to carry out those views by positive legislation. A very simple way to reach the end desired, but in order to accomplish it, it is clear that the questions at issue should be distinctly stated, the position of each party sharply defined.

In the declaration of principles of the respective political parties we should look with confidence for the clearest statements of the differing views upon the issues of the day. On the contrary, we find that the platforms of the two great parties are so strikingly similar that we may well wonder why more than one party is needed to represent opinions so essentially in harmony. Even in the case of about the only question where radical differences of view appear, the tariff, the actual legislation of the two parties when in power, almost belies the differences in the platform utterances. The truth is, political parties have lost sight of the object of their existence. They reverse President Lincoln's noble utterance, "It is not necessary that I be reëlected, it is necessary that the nation be saved," and say, "The paramount necessity is that I get into power; it is of comparatively trifling importance how any of these questions are decided." Therefore, their platform utterances are made with the one purpose of "attracting thousands of votes without driving away other thousands." The questions which they present to the people for settlement are not in reality those of the tariff; of a gold standard or the free coinage of silver; of how we shall deal with the liquor traffic and the great problem of municipal government; of the adjustment of the difficulties between capital and labor; of the relation of trusts and monopolies to the people and the state, not one of these questions which are pressing upon the people of this nation for decision are openly and squarely treated by the two parties which in the past thirty years have disputed the supremacy with each other. The supreme question which they ask the people to decide is, "Which of us will you have to rule over you?" And yet men continue to vote with one or the other that "they may not throw away their votes"!

The strange misconception which makes men regard the success of a party, in itself, the paramount issue, bears remarkable fruit. We know many men in the North who talk as though disloyalty to the Republican party were identical with disloyalty to the flag. On the other hand, some men in the South consider any one who would compass the defeat of the Democratic party a traitor to his section. This is why the efforts of the W. C. T. U., and other enemies of the liquor traffic, to force the political parties to take a decided stand upon this burning issue of the day, has aroused such bitter animosity. But we know not how we are to put down the drink curse without destroying the drink traffic, nor how we can destroy the drink traffic unless some political party will give the people a chance to declare their will concerning it. According to the best light we can now get upon the subject, this is precisely what political parties are for, and therefore we have "dragged the temperance question into politics." Until we can see it differently, "here we stand; we can do no other."

NEW DEPARTMENTS AND COMMITTEES.

A department of Christian Citizenship was established at the Baltimore Convention for the two-fold purpose of the study of political science and the influencing of all political parties and movements, along ethical lines. Mrs. Anna Beiler, wife of Vice-Chancellor S. L. Beiler, of the American University at Washington, D. C., was made superintendent. Mrs. Beiler is a graduate of the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, O., and was for several years a teacher in the South. She will prove a brilliant and able superintendent of this new and important work.

The school savings bank department was reinstated and Mrs. S. H. Oberholtzer was put at the head. She holds the same place in the World's W. C. T. U. and is an enthusiastic advocate of savings banks for the children.

The National officers, to whom the matter was referred, have selected as superintendent of the new department of kindergarten, Mrs. F. C. Pardee, and for her associate, Miss Mary Willard, daughter of Mary B. Willard, and a graduate of a Froebel institute in Germany. Mrs. Pardee is an accomplished educator and sister of Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

The other new department, non-alcoholics in medicine, has at its head, Mrs. Martha M. Allen, of Newark, N. Y. Indicative of success it need only be said that she has served the same department in the state of New York for six years.

Mrs. Mary H. Stuckenburg was elected superintendent of the department of relation of temperance to labor and capital, to succeed our dear Mrs. Emery, so lately passed to the land of rest and love. Mrs. Stuckenburg is an original crusader from Springfield, O., and is the wife of Rev. Dr. Stuckenburg, of Cambridge, Mass. Both of them made careful study of different sociological phases in Germany during their ten years' residence in Berlin. Dr. Stuckenburg is also a writer and a speaker on sociology.

Dr. L. C. Purington was transferred from franchise to health and heredity, which is understood to be her favorite specialty, as she is a thoroughly educated physician, and franchise was given to Miss Brehm, of Illinois, one of the rising young women in that great state.

The other new appointments are, Mrs. L. H. Richards, sanitary and economic cookery; Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, the press; Mrs. Ella M. Thatcher, work among soldiers and sailors; Mrs. J. B. Nichols, state and county fairs, and Mrs. Esther T. Housh, temperance literature.

The new committee on appropriations is as follows: Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, of Illinois, chairman; Miss Margaret S. Hillis, of Delaware; Mrs. Mary R. Goodale, of Louisiana; and representing the superintendents, Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Maine, and Mrs. M. F. Lovell, of Pennsylvania; and the National treasurer ex officio. In the disbursement of the money during the year the chairman will act in conference with the National treasurer and the corresponding secretary.

A new departure was taken in regard to the committee on resolutions. Hereafter it is to be chosen a year in advance, one member to be from the executive committee, one from the board of superintendents and five from the rank and file of our membership. They are to be chosen by the executive committee, subject to confirmation by the Convention, but for this beginning year the election was left to the executive.

The following have been selected: Miss Cornelia Dow, of Maine; Mrs. Ellen Tenny, New York; Miss Belle Kearney, Mississippi; Mrs. J. K. Knox, North Dakota; Mrs. Dorcas Spencer, California; and Mrs. S. F. Grubb, Missouri, from the superintendents; and Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry, Minnesota, from the executive.

The chairman and secretary are to be elected by the committee, and will be announced hereafter. It is understood that this committee is to receive, digest and formulate resolutions during the year, bringing them to the National Convention in such shape as can readily be assimilated. It is believed that our platform of principles will thereby be made better than ever before, both in thought and form.

A CONSUELO DOT FOR THE W. C. T. U.

Rhetorically speaking a dot or period completes a circuit of words and is therefore prohibitory, otherwise Tennyson's brook might have really "gone on forever." But the musical dot extends the value of a note by one-half and is, therefore, permissive, like the name Home Protection Party. The marriage dot sometimes proves to be prohibitory, and sometimes permissive, and sometimes does not prove to be at all; but "to be or not to be," forever remains the question concerning this kind of a dot, around which centers so much of interest. Our W. C. T. U. Consuelo is as yet a penniless maiden. Ought she not to have a dowry of ten millions? She is twenty-one years of age, and is strong, beautiful and pure, the peer of the best in all the land. She comes of royal blood—the seed of Abraham and of the perfect One, in that she seeks to save. She has high ambitions and has already tried her powers in lofty realms. She would not simply send perishable hot-house bridal blossoms to tenement houses and missions, but as a true philanthropist she would bring the choicest flowers of life and living to the poorest wrecked and broken soul bound by environment and ground by oppression; as a statesman she would turn the balance of power against unjust distinctions in the home and the nation; as a reformer she has already nailed up her theses and cried aloud to friend and foe "'each man's life should be an example safe and beneficent for every other man,' and here I propose to stand, God being my helper."

She is a girl who proposes to work in imperishable material—human character, to hew out the God-given qualities of mankind and womankind and to see that they have a life of freedom. She has already demonstrated the sisterhood of womanhood in all the world, and has in all of her purposes the thought of the equality of mankind.

Well, this girl is poor and it ought not so to be. She ought to have a dot which would compel the obeisance of princes—the princes of darkness. She ought to have a dot which would bring her to stand in wicked kings' houses and to sit at political princes' tables that she might speak for her people. She ought to have a dot which would bring her where she could build the tombs of the false prophets and erect the gibbets of those that drink the blood of the innocent and that she might serve humanity constructively as well as destructively.

Why should she not have it? Are there half a million who offer allegiance to her principals? Why not make her a present as she consecrates herself forever to the highest and best interests of humanity? Why not make it possible for her to go out and conquer the world by the sign of the cross?

Emerson says, "Our life is an apprenticeship to the truth that around every circle another circle can be drawn." This young lady has lived in the circle of poverty long enough. Let her life now be evolved into a well-to-do circle with its inherent power. She is our child, let us draw the new circle of a dowry around her circle of poverty.

At a recent informal editorial luncheon similar thoughts to the above were expressed and reference made to the wonderful machinery of the W. C. T. U., by which the littles can be gathered together, with playful remarks in regard to the extent of sacrifice of which we women are capable, and a little serious reflection as to what the W. C. T. U. might do with her splendid plans were she safely housed in the Temple and had a million or two at her back. Then Anna Gordon seriously laid down a bill, saying, "There is the first dollar toward the endowment of the W. C. T. U. Start it along, and let the world see that this maiden of wonderful prospects is worth something. Let's give her a chance to use her powers." What do you say, friends, with all of your wealth of love and power of sacrifice, shall she have a permissive dot worthy of her possibilities, which shall extend her value along all her lines of work for God and Home and Every Land by more than half? or shall she still remain in the prohibitory vale of poverty? Miss Gordon's one dollar is now in the National treasury. Shall it germinate and bring a worthy endowment to our beloved?

WHISKY BALLOT IN THE OLD BAY STATE.

The defeat of woman's suffrage in Massachusetts is by no means significant of women's indifference, as some would have us think. One hundred thousand men and women voted in favor and about one hundred and seventy thousand against—we have not the exact figures at hand—but imagine a minority as large as that ten years ago, or twenty! Think what it means to have secured such a minority in the Massachusetts of to-day, which is so largely made up of foreigners. It shows the steady, onward movement of the cause of justice to one-half the human race, and "there's no power on earth can stay it."

So much on the credit side. Now for the debit. A plebiscite was agreed to by the Massachusetts legislature when it was apparent that a strong tide had set in, in favor of granting municipal suffrage to women. The suffragists opposed this, holding that the legislature itself should settle the question on its merits as a question of justice. The liquor traffic, which has frequently defeated this measure, and which has determined (as those perfectly understand who know the workings of politics in Massachusetts) to keep women out of power, has compassed sea and land to gain a majority of popular votes against the measure. It has been repeatedly declared by conventions of liquor dealers that the ballot in the hand of women means the downfall of their trade. The Ohio Liquor Dealers' Association, at its annual session in 1894, stated in a resolution that it feared no one but the W. C. T. U. Whatever may be the opinion of good Christian ministers and conservative college presidents, the hard-hearted men who make their money out of alcoholic drinks, have from the first believed that their business would be hindered, and not helped, by the enfranchisement of women. Boston is the center of the New England liquor traffic.

The great dailies of that city have almost without exception ranged themselves with the "vested interests" of the saloon-keeper. The press will do this every time. It knows on "which side its bread is buttered." It proposes to feather its own nest no matter who goes shelterless; it is the buyer and seller of news and of "influoence." Politicians are yoked in with the press. They have pooled their issues. They mean to win money and fame by manipulating the vote of the mass and not masses. Protection of the home is the last thing that concerns them. If they can do a good turn to a good cause without costing them any dimes or any votes, they will, but not otherwise.

This is the situation in a nutshell. This is the "combination" that cost the women of Massachusetts the power to protect their homes from the greatest enemy that threatens their firesides. If anybody rejoices over our defeat he is either ignorant, base, or blinded by party idolatry or traditional prejudice. For those who are ignorant and base we have only an infinite pity and regret; concerning those who through wrong training or simple prejudice have gone against us in this great decision of a free people, we can only say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Corbett and Fitzsimmons have folded their tents like the Arab and silently stolen away, out of public sight and out of public mind. Prize-fighting has had its day, has played its little part and made its final exit from the stage of the civilized world. Thus one by one the "relics of barbarism" disappear. The liquor traffic is doomed to a similar fate, its abolishment being one of the inevitable steps in the "ascent of man."

Phillips Brooks has said: "Woe to the man who loses the faculty of worship, the faculty of honoring and loving and fearing not merely something better than himself, but something which is the absolute best, the perfect good, his God! The life is gone out of his soul when this is gone. There is a cloud upon his thought, a palsy on his action, a chill upon his love. Because you must worship, therefore you must have God."

A German chemist has made the discovery of a new compound body, said to possess the peculiar quality of solidifying under the action of heat, and to again revert to the liquid state at a temperature below 32° Fahr. To this substance the name of "crostase" has been given. It is supposed that up to the present time no body possesses this remarkable property of liquefying when cold and solidifying when hot.

A Japanese bookseller at Tokyo thus vaunts his wares: "Books elegant as a singing girl. Print clear as crystal. Paper tough as elephant's hide. Customers treated as politely as by the rival steamship companies. Goods despatched as expeditiously as a cannon ball. Parcels done up with as much care as that bestowed on her husband by a loving wife."

J. G. Woolley says his call to the ministry was like this: "Lift up your voice like a trumpet and show my people their transgressions and the house of Jacob thy sins," and his description of the trumpet in part is this: "The trumpet is strident, harsh and brassy, worthless to a troubadour, but perfection for a herald. It is never out of tune with itself. It is stolid, but trusty; whatever the trumpeter says to it, it says—solo or orchestra, circus or funeral—no matter. Whenever a draft is made upon it, it pays, spot cash, legal tender, single standard, not what the audience wants, perhaps, but it gets it just the same. The band master may go crazy, but that never unsettles the trumpet; if there is anything wrong it comes out of the man at the mouthpiece."

The surgeon-general now assures us, and furnishes statistics to prove, that alcoholism is on the decrease. In 1890 no less than seventeen posts had more than ten per cent of their average number under medical care for drunkenness; in 1891, eleven posts; in 1892, ten; in 1893, seven, and in 1894, four. These figures are hopeful, and warrant the belief that in the near future delirium tremens will form no part of the unofficial tactics of our standing army.

An incident in connection with the work of the floating hospital in Boston points to the urgent need of instruction in dietetics among the poorer classes. Mothers boarded the vessel carrying packages containing green fruit, sausages, cold potatoes, salt pork, beer, brandy and whisky, all of which were confiscated by the physicians in attendance and consigned to the dock instead of being given to the sick babies as their mothers intended. No wonder that children coming from such homes are constantly ailing and that doctors' bills make sad inroads into the parents' wages.

Mrs. Helen Campbell has admirably put the argument for the new times as contrasted with the old. She says that an energetic lady eighty years of age declared that the good old times were largely humbug. She said: "Don't I remember! There was my beautiful Aunt Adelaide, whose husband kicked her out into the snow one winter's night in one of his periodical sprees. He had done it before, and this time she would not go back. But the law gave him her property and the three children, and she ended her days in an insane asylum because she could not get them. No, my dear, thank God you live to-day and not a hundred years ago, and every new day will give you more and more cause for being thankful. It is a better time for every soul on earth, and this thing people call 'good old times' is a dreary humbug, that might better be decently interred and done with. Give me the new time and the new man, for he is coming right along side by side with the 'new woman'—God bless her!" and God bless him, too!

On Duty.

MINNESOTA.

HERE AND THERE.

Pipestone union lately held an "old ladies' contest" in the high school auditorium. A good audience was present and enjoyed the entertainment very much. Mrs. E. C. Frisbee was awarded a medal for reading and Mrs. Sybil Monteville one for recitation. A special feature of the evening was the L. T. L. orchestra of Edgerton, composed of small lads who executed some excellent music.

A Demorest medal contest was held in St. Paul in Como chapel not very long ago and proved a pleasant and successful affair. Seven young ladies gave recitations showing much care in preparation. The medal was awarded to Miss Hannah Madison, who recited, "Lager Beer and a Bier for Lager." Music was furnished by the Como orchestra, also vocal numbers by Mr. and Mrs. Brac and Misses Bailey, Osel and Sharpfelly. Great credit is due to Miss S. E. Bartholomew for her untiring efforts to make temperance work a success in that part of the city.

Tintah union labors under great disadvantages, yet has not thought of surrender. The membership is so widely scattered that if meetings are held in the village, some must come ten miles to attend. An arrangement was made to celebrate the first anniversary of the organization, but lo! just before the time set, the principal speaker for the evening, Mrs. J. H. Knox, of Wahpeton, was taken ill; the president of the union had threshers, the physician who had promised to speak on heredity sent word at the last moment that he could not come because of duty's call, and so the rally was postponed until a more convenient season—postponed merely, not given up, for they fully intend to have it yet, Providence permitting. Several Temple Wheels have been filled, and more are filling. A column in the local paper has been supplied constantly, without a break, since last March.

Atwater Y mourns the loss of a member, Aslug A. Narverud, aged twelve years. The bereaved family was tenderly remembered by the union.

Marion union, though small, is energetic, and each annual meeting finds the members ready to start afresh with renewed zeal. Just now they are regretting the change of residence that takes from them their faithful recording secretary, who has filled the office for years. They have superintendents of scientific temperance instruction, work among woodsmen, temperance in Sabbath-schools, and flower mission. They have six Union Signals, and eleven White-Ribboners. Members of the union attended county and district conventions, and were much benefited thereby.

The union of Stillwater held a prayer and praise service of great interest and profit on October 5. The same date marked the fiftieth milestone in the life of Mrs. Cressey, the beloved president of the union. After the meeting all were invited to remain to a bountiful repast and social hour in honor of the occasion, and a beautiful chair was presented Mrs. Cressey from the union. A handsome watch from Mr. Cressey and many remembrances from other friends proved the esteem in which this energetic worker is held.

STATE CONVENTION ECHOES.

To the writer, who did not attend the state convention, it has been a great pleasure to read some of the reports kindly furnished by Miss Hitchcock. And now they are passed on, in a small measure, that others may also enjoy them.

Sunday-school work has taken many steps in advance. The Sunday-school rallies, which originated with our state superintendent, and have been adopted into the National department, have had marked success. "Thousands of children have assembled in the temperance rallies, to hear the woe pronounced upon the poisonous cup. Its echo has reached many a home where wine and beer are used. Hundreds have signed the triple pledge at these rallies after pastor or superintendent has pointed out the reason why we should not defile the body with alcohol or tobacco, and why the lips should not speak profane words."

Sabbath observance has had more attention than for many years. Last spring great effort was made to get a united movement to create public sentiment against the great and growing sin of Sabbath desecration. The state superintendent, Mrs. A. V. Nicholas, of St. Paul, sent to every paper in the state an appeal and circular letter, calling upon all W. C. T. U's, churches, pastors, temperance organizations, law and order leagues and individuals, to help maintain the Sabbath as the day of the Lord for the people.

In St. Paul a mass-meeting was held, looking to the special remembrance of the week of prayer for Sabbath observance. Committees were appointed to visit the clergy and invite their coöperation. Later, and probably in part as a result, a permanent Sabbath Observance League was organized. Thousands of leaflets have been distributed throughout the state and more interest awakened than ever before.

Work among woodsmen, ever an important department in this state, has not fallen short this year. Mrs. Burgan, state superintendent, made the pertinent suggestion that the unions begin at once to save and gather literature for the camps. We are not always prepared to send it as soon as camps are opened, so valuable time is lost. In camps where they are well supplied with reading matter, cards are not so great a temptation, nor do they so readily leave camp to get liquor.

Mrs. Hazzard, in her report on state and county fairs, urges the necessity of W. C. T. U. buildings, at least on the state fair grounds, where the work could be carried on to much greater advantage if it were housed in keeping with its importance. She also urges the unions to be alert at the time of the meeting of the county fair associations (generally in December and January) to use their influence to secure good men upon the official boards—and why not good women also?

Work among the miners is comparatively new in Minnesota, and most of the miners being foreigners the English language is not sufficiently understood to work well among them. Yet something has been accomplished. Three unions have been established in mining towns, one of which keeps a reading-room supplied with periodicals in different languages, also a library of over one hundred volumes.

These are but fragments from a few reports, but enough to show that the W. C. T. U. in Minnesota is marching on.

One of the most important features of our state work is our state paper. The White Ribboner is not only our only means of communication with each other and the work at large, but it is one principal means of letting "outsiders" know what we are doing, and of inducing them to become "insiders." Yet, if it is to become what it ought to be, it must be self-sustaining, and to this end special efforts are to be made this year. If each and every woman will "lend a hand" (with fifty cents in the hand) it can be made a paper which will be an honor to the state and the work. Shall we not try?

IOWA.

A FINE REPORT.

For several weeks the cheerful hum of district convention work has been heard throughout our borders. The first, fourth, fifth, sixth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, seventeenth, twenty-second and twenty-third districts have all held their annual meetings.

Our state president attended six of these, giving from one to two days to each of them. Her time was occupied in conducting schools of methods, parliamentary drills, model unions, and in numberless other helpful ways. She also gave fourteen addresses, and organized two unions of fourteen members each, and several honoraries.

The conventions were all well attended, aggregating a much larger attendance than on any previous years. The women are full of enthusiasm and courage, ready for work. The new unions are especially desirous of learning the best methods.

A few reports have been sent me, from which I gladly glean the following items:

Mrs. Carrie K. Godfrey, president of the eleventh district, planned and conducted an evangelistic conference of one day in connection with their convention.

Ninth district convened at New Sharon. A special feature of this gathering was the rich spiritual power that characterized its devotional meetings. Delegates brought their Bibles. The Bible talks by our evangelist, Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, awakened thoughtful inquiry on all sides.

The fifteenth district convention, held at Boone, was favored with an unusual number of inspiring helpers—Mrs. Dunham, Mrs. Palmer, three women pastors of churches, all white-ribboners, two trained nurses—district officers—to stand for the Temperance Hospital, and four original Crusaders, one of whom was from Ohio. With such women in attendance the convention could not fail to be one of remarkable interest. It was in the county of Boone that Mrs. Palmer led a band of Crusaders for weeks in succession into the dark dens of Ogden twenty-one years ago. A son and daughter of one of the saloon-keepers then visited have recently been converted.

The tenth district meeting was held at Washington. Miss Anna D. Brown, our state superintendent of L. T. L. work, spoke one evening; a Demorest medal contest was held the second evening.

A postal card from Mrs. Annie Satterlee, of Dunlap, has reached me, stating that the sixth district convention was held at that place, and was a very successful one, also that a newspaper had been sent me from which to gather a more complete report; but the paper has not been received.

Our Mrs. Dunham started a movement at the fourteenth district convention to place the name of Mother Benedict on a tablet in Willard Hall, by pledging five dollars. The convention pledged sixteen more. At the last report sixty-seven dollars had been pledged. Every district in the state is asked to lend a hand in this good work, and it is confidently expected that the $100 will all be raised by the time our state convention is held. This fourteenth district convention also pledged $100 for the Temple, to be paid by January 1, 1896.

Seceding unions and individuals are becoming convinced that non-partisanship is a myth, a "delusion and a snare," and that there never was any reason for seceding from the beloved National organization. Independence has recently decided by unanimous vote to follow the standard of the W. C. T. U. of the state of Iowa. In some other places non-partisan unions have disbanded and many of the members have joined our loyal unions or organized new ones auxiliary to the state union. This has recently occurred at Fort Madison, and there are more to follow.

The twenty-second district convention was held at Elma. Under the wise direction of its president, Mrs. Irene G. Adams, the convention work was finished on Saturday and gospel temperance meetings conducted by Mrs. Anna M. Palmer, filled the Sabbath day. Owing to failing health Mrs. Adams was compelled to decline a re-election. Mrs. Ellen G. Van Leuven was elected president and Mrs. L. S. Kelly secretary.

The twenty-third district convention met at Fayette. Delegates were in attendance from nearly all its unions. Written reports were read from every union but one.

Mrs. Palmer was present and the sessions were marked by a spirit of tender, sisterly love. Mother Benedict conducted mothers' meetings and reported much done in rescuing the "prodigal daughters of Iowa" from lives of sin and shame and turning wandering feet into ways of righteousness and peace. A resolution to raise one hundred dollars for the Temple was adopted. The old officers were reëlected as follows: President, Mrs. Clara Drake White; secretary, Mrs. Thera B. True.

Our W. C. T. U. under the active management of state and National superintendent of fair work, Mrs. C. V. Weaver, had headquarters at our state fair at Des Moines. Mrs. Dunham was there to speak on Woman's Day.

Des Moines Temple union has sustained a heavy loss in the death of its treasurer, Mrs. Helen F. Parlin. Mrs. Parlin was one of our choicest treasurers. She was the first president of Temple union.

Col. C. J. Holt has been doing so much telling work in the state that I haven't room to report it. If any union wants to strike terror to the hearts of evil-doers, let them send for Colonel Holt.

Miss Lizzie Kessel, president of Fremont union, writes in enthusiastic terms of the work of Dr. J. H. Orcutt in her county. She says he is "a man of energy, of talent and of determination that knows no such word as fail. His discourses are carefully prepared and finely delivered." Dr. Orcutt gives illustrated, scientific lectures on the effects of alcoholics and narcotics on the human system, also on "Microbes and Men." Unions desiring his services can address Mrs. M. J. O. Whiting, Belmond, for terms and dates.

Mrs. Sherfey, president of Sweetland union, reports much special work in the flower mission line done by Mrs. Etta Carter, superintendent of Band of Mercy work, who has done much for suffering humanity, not finding any mercy work to do. Only one young lady ever wore a bird on her hat in Sweetland and she has moved away.

Mrs. C. H. Howe, our state lecturer and organizer, is now working in the district of your reporter. She has organized a union of twenty members at Decorah. A worker from that place writes thus: "Mrs. Howe is a splendid lecturer and a great worker. I am so thankful you sent her to us."

A pastor who feared to arrange for her in one of his charges, where trouble had been made a year ago by an unwise speaker, but who kindly arranged for her at another point, writes: "Mrs. Howe spoke at A— last night to the evident delight of all. She can have the right of way in my charge at H—whenever it will suit you to make a date for her. I am confident she will do only good wherever she goes."

Iowa politicians are busy at their all too successful work of hoodwinking voters. The Republican candidate for governor is reported to have said that "The mulct law is in the main satisfactory," and to have given a pledge to sign a bill for the return of breweries and distilleries to the state. The Democratic candidate for the same office is a church member. Liquor dealers and their sympathizers will vote for these men. So will hundreds of Christian voters. "How long, oh, Lord, how long?"

The Prohibitionists have an excellent state ticket. Our Mrs. L. D. Carhart is candidate for the office of state superintendent of public instruction. A better one could not be found. Let every white-ribboner in this commonwealth use prayers and influence for her election.

We had a fine report at National Convention. We have paid National dues for over 2,700, showing a gain of over 500 new members, while dues are still flowing into the state treasury. Praise the Lord!

INDIANA.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION.

Vincennes is in itself interesting from the fact of its being one of the historical towns of Indiana, and because the mystic shadows of Indian and French legend linger about it, and where the remains of those ancient pre-historic races have been found in abundance, before which we stand in awe as before the revelations of an unsealed book; to all of this prominence it added more, by entertaining the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Indiana, October 4–9. Although an appointed delegate, it was not my privilege to attend the convention, and I therefore labor under two disadvantages in compiling a report: First, the lack of personal knowledge and vivid enthusiasm which attendance at convention gives one; second, being so recently appointed (at this convention) to the office of state press superintendent, I am only in my novitiate, waiting instruction from my superior officer, the National superintendent. Therefore, the link I add to the chain of News from the Field may be a very weak one, wholly inadequate to the W. C. T. U. work of the great commonwealth I represent.

But the Indiana W. C. T. U. has nothing to fear for the success of its convention under the leadership of its beloved president, Mrs. L. M. Beck, a woman clear-headed and sagacious, broad of culture and Christian grace. The unanimous reëlection of the whole corps of state officers shows their appreciation by their constituency.

Convention opened by president in the usual order at Fifth Street Presbyterian church, roll call showing an attendance of two hundred and twenty-six delegates. Among other things of general interest was the report of the secretary of our Hadley Industrial School for Girls, of which institution the W. C. T. U. of Indiana is justly proud. The secretary made this unequivocal statement, "that the school in no way must be considered a 'reformatory.'" The greatest detriment had been the sending there of girls needing reformation. The aim should be to establish a system of industrial education in the school second to none in the country. Three distinct classes of girls were in the institution, and they would always be so classed: 1. Those that have capacity to become industrial teachers. 2. Those who with all the teaching will never become anything more than good common domestics. 3. Those who will be only second class domestics.

The president's address was full of gems: "Summer assemblies are one of the open doors for reaching the best elements of society with our work. We are invited by the management to come. We need, as do other societies, to provide the best talent we have for such gatherings, and to do this must work in more systematic ways." She referred to the great advance made by the Catholic Church in temperance work and sentiment; to the W. C. T. U. as an educational force. If the churches had taken up the work as they ought, there would have been no need of the W. C. T. U. nor of the Salvation Army, nor the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. If the church of God will do this work, we do not care how soon these other agencies go down. She further recommended the creation of a good citizenship department. "We are asked to carry around remonstrances for the Good Citizens' League; let us do the work in our own name."

The reports of the corresponding secretary and treasurer showed a membership of 4,793, a gain of forty members in the year; and 321 local unions, a gain of seven.

The superintendent of franchise states "that she believes the general sentiment in Indiana is as strong for woman suffrage as in any other state, but it is not crystallized and organized for effective showing and work."

In looking over the work of the year the one thing that should put a song of joy and thankfulness in the heart of every loyal W. C. T. U. of Indiana, is the passage of the scientific temperance instruction bill, the accomplishment of a well-planned purpose. Indissolubly connected with this victory are the names of Indiana's honored governor, Claude Mathews, who signed the bill, and Miss Lodie E. Reed, our indefatigable, persevering, untiring superintendent. The work in this department was divided into three classes: 1. Legislative 2. Textbook revision. 3. Enforcement of the law.

I quote from her report: "During the six years of a non-legislative campaign, this department had become so disorganized, that few counties were found to have superintendents; but so quick and hearty was the response to the call to arms, that in fifty-seven counties I was soon able to work through the county superintendents or presidents. In ten others some local unions accepted the responsibility for the county canvass, and in the remaining twenty-five the work was done through the coöperation of individuals, usually ministers in the localities.

The reported number as indorsing memorials was 45,749, a low estimate, for those not reporting the number would be 10,000. Special memorials were also secured from Christian and educational societies, aggregating 187,150 persons. The Presbyterian Synod put the memorial in the form of a resolution, which was unanimously adopted, as was also the one sent to the State Teachers' Association. I believe it safe to assert that no measure before the state legislature has ever been petitioned for by so large a number. It was the uprising of the people of the state in indignant protest against the disgrace of being one of the last states to provide by legislation for the temperance education of its children."

Mrs. Barnes, General Secretary, delighted the Y's and lent grace to the convention by her presence.

Notice was given of amendments to the constitution, one of which was to make superintendents members of the executive committee, which is as it should be.

TEXAS.

TIDINGS FROM THE LONE STAR STATE.

Since my last letter Texas has attracted the attention of all who are interested in the prohibition of brutality and gambling. Though it cannot be classed as news we can but felicitate ourselves on having such a brave young governor, one who fears not to leave his political future with the law abiding element, which predominates in our state. Some papers have characterized the sudden calling of the legislature to prohibit the prize fight as "a bit of hypocrisy and humbug." "With its murders, lynchings and other frequent deeds of actual and criminal lawlessness, Texas is made to seem absurd by the hysterical activity of its governor in stopping a fistic encounter," says the New York World.

The vast dimensions of Texas are generally overlooked when its "lawlessness" is referred to, also that the crimes have not the sanction of the government. Governor Culberson says if they will advertise a lynching a hundredth part as much as they did the prize fight, he will guarantee that it doesn't take place on Texas soil.

The Southern Pacific Railroad, which runs entirely across the state of Texas, is the first one to recognize that women have not been accorded the same privileges as men in the way of sleeping car conveniences. So their sleepers are now furnished with a sitting-room for ladies, to correspond with the smoking department for the men.

The district convention held at Weatherford, the first one since the redistricting of the state, was a decided success. Mrs. Carter's intelligent planning, and the faithful carrying out of those plans by the Weatherford women, led by Mrs. Catlin, was the secret of it.

The state president, state evangelist and district president were presented with badges daintily hand-painted by Miss Fain. Mrs. Stoddard addressed a good audience one night and Mrs. Sweeney the next night. Mrs. Butts, superintendent of colored work, organized a union among the colored people. Fort Worth was well represented at the convention, having twelve voting delegates.

Fort Worth L. T. L., organized three months ago, has received the premium, "Beautiful Joe," offered by Mrs. Stoddard. They have sent in dues for fifty-five members, and still have the state banner. Their music is entrancing; they have lately sent for two dozen "White Ribbon Hymnals," and sing those beautiful songs.

Houston celebrated Miss Willard's birthday by an afternoon tea at the home of Mrs. J. O. Davis. Appropriate services were held, light refreshments served, one new member gained, and all enjoyed the afternoon.

Galveston has had the pleasure of a visit from the state organizer, Mrs. Belle G. Bigelow. Mrs. Dinsmore has distributed literature, filled railroad boxes, held prayer-meetings and visited hospital patients.

Stephenville has elected officers.

Taylor W. C. T. U. is growing numerically and spiritually. New members are received at every meeting. Mothers' meetings are held once a month and gospel temperance meetings every two weeks. The ministers take great interest in helping in the meetings.

Taylor was greatly blessed recently in a meeting held by Rev. J. B. Culpepper, of Georgia, and the sweet singer, Mr. Tillman. Both are earnest temperance workers, and on Sunday afternoon they held a special service for the W. C. T. U. At the close one hundred and seventy-five were added to their list, two-thirds of whom were men. The ladies pinned white ribbons on them which they continued to wear during the remainder of the meeting.

A union among the colored people has since been organized by Miss Maggie Angus.

Temple has a new L. T. L. of twenty-eight members organized by Mrs. W. R. Leggat.

Hillsboro had a delightful lawn party at the residence of Mrs. J. N. Porter. Socially as well as financially the entertainment was a great success.

Dallas was honored by the presence of Hon. Samuel Dickie, of Michigan, chairman of the National Prohibition party. He spoke one day during the state fair to a large audience. The afternoon was given to the discussion of the best methods of promoting the interest of the Prohibition party in Texas.

San Antonio W. C. T. U. has elected new officers, Mrs. Fry being elected president, a position she occupied several years ago. Mrs. Leavitt's birthday was observed by a public meeting at which several addresses were delivered.

The Fort Sam Houston Y is composed of thirty-one young men. They hold regular business meetings, followed by literary programs, have held a temperance rally and socials, and distributed temperance tracts.

West End L. T. L. goes on its widening way. There are generally about one hundred in attendance. A college president has recently said of it that "there is no estimating the educational influence that L. T. L. and medal contests have had on the community." Several families have given up the use of beer.

At the last medal contest the fortunate contestant was Mr. Ed McDaniel, who had taken the pledge two years ago and kept it. A pretty hard thing to do on a ranch.

The Sweeny Y's, of San Antonio, held a temperance rally recently, with good addresses, music and recitations.

Taylor Y had an increase of sixty-eight members after the Culpepper meeting. They gave a social lately, at which each member told how she had traded with five cents and made "other five," or more. One girl invested in materials for making candy, and made almost three dollars.

The Laurel Y, of Aransas Pass, held a profitable apron social after one of their business meetings last month. Neckties to match the pretty aprons, the young ladies wore were sold to the young men for ten cents each. They soon found the apron to correspond, and proceeded to hem it. The first prize was a white tie; the consolation prize was a rusty needle and thimble.

Texarkana Y is right at the front. They have a membership of one hundred and twenty-four. They have united with the W's in establishing a reading room. They secured a monthly subscription of sixty-five dollars from the business men of the city, and all their books were donated. Their librarian keeps the room open until ten in the evening. On Thursdays ice cream is served. The proceeds are donated to the poor of the city one week during the month.

By their Brownie show they cleared one hundred and forty dollars. One of the Y's composed a Brownie book which sold rapidly at ten cents. A reception was tendered the teachers who were attending the Texarkana normal. They also arranged a display in the labor day procession. First the W's in carriages, then the Y's all in white on a white float, then the L. T. L's on a beautiful float singing temperance songs.

Mrs. Stoddard addressed the colored union at Greenville. She also organized one at Kingston and spoke to a large audience at Lane Oak.

Shavano has a new union of twelve members, organized by Mrs. Donaldson.

News in a Nutshell

MRS. HELEN CAMPBELL, the author and philanthropist, after completing a course of lectures in the University of Illinois, in November, will spend the winter in Chicago doing college settlement work in which she is deeply interested.

DURING the week beginning October 29, Miss C. L. Burnett, Ohio, state organizer, attended one district and one county convention, where she helped all day, lectured eight times, held two day meetings, organized two unions, held one parlor conference with the Y's, held a conference with the twenty teachers of the public schools, and spoke on narcotics before ten schools, besides helping individual workers. Her address at the Y. M. C. A. mass-meeting on Sunday afternoon was not only helpful but of great literary merit.

AT a matron's contest, held by Manville, Wyo., W. C. T. U., devotional exercises were conducted by the resident minister. The recitations were interspersed with music. A copy of "A Great Mother" was awarded the winner, Mrs. M. Perry, who gave a selection from THE UNION SIGNAL, entitled, "To the Rescue." At the close, the temperance pledge and the tobacco pledge each received a goodly number of signers. A collection was taken to purchase literature. The house was well filled and much interest manifested. Arrangements have been made to hold another.

A BROCHURE in memory of that honored friend of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Amelia C. Thorp, of Cambridge, Mass., the mother of Mrs. Ole Bull, has recently been issued. It contains addresses given before the society and on behalf of no-license in Cambridge. It may be said without exaggeration that the great change by which the most important university town in the United States came to be a no-license town, and has been for many years, was due to Mrs. Thorp and her association with the W. C. T. U. more than to any other single cause. Our country would soon be a heaven upon earth if women of gifts and graces, talent and wealth, were all as devoted to God and humanity as was Mrs. Thorp.

A METHODIST pastor in Baltimore writes that Mrs. Skelton spoke in his church during the Convention, and that she edified and instructed the young people on gospel temperance lines, and that she is surely an efficient worker if her work with him was a fair sample. He says, "Her earnest, brave, original, quaint, terse, pathetic putting of truth was thoroughly enjoyed by our people." Nine women gave their names for membership in the W. C. T. U.

A CORRESPONDENT and friend of THE UNION SIGNAL writes: "I wish you would say through the columns of your splendid paper that if every lady would hand her UNION SIGNAL to those who know not the great worth of it, many volunteers would come forward. I make it a practice to give to others all of my valuable reading matter. The results are surprising, making fifty families acquainted with THE UNION SIGNAL each year, many of whom will no doubt become subscribers and co-laborers in this great work."

MRS. LUCY THURMAN, of Jackson, Mich., National superintendent of work among colored people, went from Baltimore to Chester county, Pa., where she organized seven unions. Miss Alice Lewis, president of the West Chester W. C. T. U., introduced the speaker, and those present were greatly delighted with the instruction given. Mrs. Thurman has a fine flow of language, and her descriptive powers are remarkable. This devoted superintendent is planning to spend the winter in the South, lecturing and organizing among the colored people.

AT the October term of the supreme judicial court for Waldo county, Me., twenty-six indictments were found against liquor-sellers. Fines and costs to the amount of $2,276.67 were collected, and two liquor-sellers were sent to jail. This was largely due to the efficient and faithful work of the county attorney, Ellery Bowden, Esq., of Winterport, and the state constable, Joseph R. Mears, of Morrill. At a meeting of Belfast W. C. T. U., November 7, resolutions were unanimously passed by a rising vote, indorsing the work of these faithful officials and wishing them Godspeed.

IT is a pathetic fact that our W. C. T. U. evangelist, Mrs. J. Fowler Willing, employed the first few days after her husband passed "into the regions beyond" in writing out (and with remarkable vividness and power) her impressions of his brief and holy life. The book has been published by the Methodist Book Concern, Cincinnati, Ohio, and is entitled "A Prince of the Realm." One Sunday recently Miss Willard read it through at a sitting, and was impressed by its power to exalt one's purpose and to make the Christian life a drawing power. In her opinion the story is told with great simplicity and not a little humor; there is not a particle of cant about it, and it would go a long way toward making any young man who read it a stalwart Christian.

A VERY successful series of parliamentary drills, led by our National W. C. T. U. superintendent, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, of Portland, Mich., was held in New York city, October 29, 30 and 31, under the auspices of Sorosis. A second series immediately followed on November 1, 2 and 5. Mrs. Daniel J. Youmans, treasurer of Sorosis, gave her spacious and beautiful rooms for the meetings, and a large number of ladies gathered to study parliamentary law under the able leadership of Mrs. Benjamin. On Monday, November 4, Mrs. Benjamin was the honored guest of Sorosis at their regular social meeting and spoke upon the topic of the day at the request of the chairman. She also expressed her great pleasure in seeing the members of the club together and alluded to the excellent work presented in the addresses of the day. At the close of the second series of drills a member of the class paid a well deserved tribute to the professional ability of Mrs. Benjamin, and said that the lessons had not only been wonderfully instructive, but also very enjoyable. The class had expected to be well taught, but found themselves also most delightfully entertained. In view of her unvarying kindness, cheerfulness, patience and courtesy, a rising vote of thanks was unanimously and enthusiastically carried. Mrs. Benjamin responded in her own pleasant way, saying many complimentary words to the class, and alluding to the happy afternoon spent with the club as their guest. Her affectionate closing words made each member of the class a personal friend and forged one more link between eastern women and the women of the west.

ON October 23, there passed to the heavenly home one of the gentlest and sweetest of earth, the mother of the World's and National W. C. T. U. evangelistic superintendent, Mrs. C. Greenwood. She was the joy and center of a charming home circle, with a gracious and hospitable welcome for all who were so favored as to be her guests. Her deep interest in the temperance work and in all her daughter's labors was marked and helpful. She was one of those modest characters whose lovely Christian spirit is best known at home, where she will be sadly missed. Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, to whom her mother's sudden release is a heavy blow, has the deep sympathy of her co-workers the world around and especially of the home union over which she has presided for seventeen years.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGIONERS, ATTENTION.

The great National Convention which has come and gone, has by its vote placed our L. T. L. on such a vantage ground as it has never before occupied. We are no longer a department but a branch of the work of our great Mother National. The woman standing at the head of this branch is no longer a superintendent but a general secretary, and is to be henceforth a member of the National executive committee. It remains for us, dear sisters, to show ourselves worthy of the confidence thus reposed in us by a new consecration which shall be manifest in more effective service than we have ever before rendered.

Especially should we impress upon our Legioners more emphatically than ever before, that they, as a part of our great white ribbon army, are to count it a privilege to help on its work. Pennsylvania and Indiana had each its L. T. L. delegate in the Baltimore Convention, which was a gain of one over last year. Now, let every state begin at once to plan for a delegate to the National Convention of 1896. Each state is left free to bring this about in its own way, provided it comes up to the requirement of fifty dollars paid into the National treasury. We would suggest, as a convenient method, that each L. T. L. member be requested to pay ten cents in dues, five cents of which shall be retained in the state W. C. T. U. treasury, and the remainder sent to the National treasury. All these dues should pass through the hands of the state W. C. T. U. treasurer.

Several states have already provided for L. T. L. representation in their annual W. C. T. U. conventions upon payment of dues, and it is hoped that all the rest will follow the example of the National W. C. T. U. in this respect, and also in making the L. T. L. a branch, and its state superintendent a secretary.

Iowa this year received the L. T. L. prize banner for the largest percentage of increase in active Legions. North Dakota retained the Crusader banner for the largest percentage of increase in subscriptions to The Young Crusader.

At the L. T. L. conference held in Baltimore it was decided to adopt as the Senior motto: "The Future is Ours." The Junior motto will be the same as heretofore: "Tremble, King Alcohol, We Shall Grow Up!" The graduates' motto will also be retained: "Lifting Others as we Climb."

A new Senior pledge card has also been decided upon, which will we trust be ready very soon.

By vote of the conference the special objects for L. T. L. contributions during the coming year are to be the Temple and the L. T. L. room in the National Temperance Hospital. We suggest that each state superintendent make her first call for the Temple, because of the effort being made to raise a specified sum for that object before January 1, 1896. This call should be made at once, and made urgently. Later the claims of our L. T. L. room should be emphatically set forth.

In the opinion of all Legioners the most interesting object displayed on the literature table at Baltimore was "Marching Songs, No. 3," just from the press, prepared by our own Miss Gordon, who has thus added another to her many labors of love for the L. T. L. boys and girls. This number is especially adapted for the use of the Seniors, and will mean much for the future success of our work.

The conference wisely refrained from recommending new plans of work, for very much must be done to place some of the plans previously adopted upon a solid basis. Especially is this true of

1. The matter of dues spoken of above.

2. The Junior seal courses which we are very desirous to have developed this year. The necessary directions will be found in the leaflet, "Plans for the L. T. L.," which can be ordered from the W. T. P. A.

3. The Normal grade, which has in it great possibilities for the advancement of our work, and which should be brought to the attention of every W and Y union as early as possible by our L. T. L. superintendents.

In addition to these more recent plans the older ones should be vigorously carried out:

1. The diploma course of study for the Seniors, who, as graduates, should be gathered into a state Legion as soon as practicable:

2. Annual county L. T. L. conventions, which have proved the most effective means for awakening and maintaining the enthusiasm of the young people. Explicit directions for these gatherings are given in the leaflet, entitled, "L. T. L. Conventions."

3. County conferences of superintendents and teachers for the discussion of methods.

Above all, let us seek daily supplies of heavenly wisdom and strength through our 7 p. m. union of prayer.

HELEN G. RICE, Nat. Supt.

DEPARTMENT WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

DEAR SISTERS:—I am glad to announce that two valuable additions have been made to the associates of this department. Mrs. Dr. Stuckenburg, whose husband was for fourteen years minister to the American church in Berlin, and also now occupies a prominent place among the clergymen of this country, has kindly consented to become my associate in the German division. She is a very highly cultivated woman, thoroughly conversant with the needs of the German people, their prejudices and peculiarities; and by her charming personality, fine intelligence and broad culture is eminently fitted to gain an access to the better class of these people. Wherever it is possible to do so she will speak in their churches.

Mrs. Holden Byles, of Omaha, Neb., an English lady of fine cultivation, has consented to become an associate also. She speaks German, French and Italian fluently. She was a member of Lady Henry Somerset's executive committee in England, so that she is well known to our National officers, who value her highly as a gifted speaker. These ladies will both be glad to make engagements to work for this department in any of the large cities or larger towns, speaking in these tongues and holding mass-meetings or organizing wherever possible. Their terms are only fifteen dollars per week and expenses. This last includes transportation from the last place visited, and current expenses while in a city or town.

I hope to have engagements for Mrs. Stuckenburg in Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburg, East Orange and New York soon. If any other of the places adjacent can make arrangements for her they will find it greatly to their advantage to have her while she is near. Mrs. Byles will be glad to make similar engagements in the West. She will also speak in our American churches.

I have often wondered why our superintendents of literature confine their efforts to the diffusion of papers, leaflets and tracts in the English language. Literature means literature. It never did nor never will mean something in the English language. Our aims and purposes are to cultivate sentiment among people whose views need changing along the line of total abstinence and prohibition.

Why, then, do our superintendents of literature, state, district and local, not feel that their work ought to include temperance leaflets and tracts of all kinds included in our W. C. T. U. work? I do not always have superintendents of foreign work in communities where there are foreign people, but if the superintendents of literature would have it in their hearts to carry on this work as well as the English tongue a great deal more could be accomplished. I hope any one so disposed will send for my catalogue. We have a fine assortment of tracts and leaflets in eighteen languages, and are getting out new ones very often.

The germs float in the air, everywhere, and we cannot keep from breathing them into our lungs. We need fear nothing, however, if we are in good health. But when the body is weak, and the throat and lungs congested from coughs and colds, the germs may gain foothold. To prevent their doing it we must relieve the conditions.

In addition to the new associates spoken of above, Miss Kate Lunden, our sweet singer, has charge of the Scandinavian division. She is now working in the eastern states organizing Scandinavian unions, etc. Over three hundred Scandinavians became members of our W. C. T. U. through her efforts last year. Her services can be secured by addressing her at Flemington, N. J. Mrs. Princell, of Minneapolis, Minn., was a valuable worker in connection with Miss Lunden last year, and though I am not at liberty to say anything as to her services, I hope she may be secured for work in the West. Our Miss Lindahl, the missionary at Ellis Island, was married in October to a very worthy gentleman. This loses her to our work, greatly to our regret, as she was a faithful and efficient laborer. We hope soon to secure some one to take her place. Mrs. Van Olenda, of Holland, Mich., in the Dutch division, Mrs. E. J. Harwood, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, of the Spanish work, and Mrs. Nellie Blessing Eyster, of San Francisco, of the Chinese department, are all carrying on their work ably and faithfully.

Sisters, let us have your help. Do all you can to break down the barriers caused by strangeness of tongue and to gain those who come to us for God and humanity.

DEPARTMENT OF MERCY.

WINNERS OF PRIZES.

The two prizes offered by the National department of mercy, one of five dollars and the other of ten dollars in gold for essays on cruelty in its relation to dress and to food, and concerning our dominion over animals, have been awarded by the committees and presented at the Baltimore Convention. The winner of the five dollar prize was Miss Elvie B. Page, aged fourteen years, of Olympia, Wash. Miss Jennie Whitlock, of New York city, N. Y., and Miss Nettie M. Arnold, Fairfax, Ia., aged respectively sixteen and seventeen years, wrote essays which deserve honorable mention. The ten dollar prize was awarded to Mrs. Velma V. Beebe, Loveland, Col.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

"On the wing" seems to have been the order of the day since Convention closed, and Atlanta is now the spot whence the Corresponding Secretary's Notes are sent forth. Of the briefest they must be this week, and indeed there is very little to report until the thread of routine work shall be again taken up at National Headquarters. My coming here was quite unexpected to me, as until the day Convention closed Miss Willard had hoped to be able to attend in person. That plan having been abandoned I came directly here from Washington, and in company with Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks and Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols have arranged a program for W. C. T. U. day, November 6. In addition to those already mentioned Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, Mrs. W. C. Sibley and Mrs. Mary Frost Ormsby will be present and we hope to have a day which will reflect credit both upon the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Atlanta Exposition. The Women's Congresses are proving a feature of great interest, although the fact that they are held upon the grounds, necessitating a fifty cent admission fee from each one in attendance, is not conducive to crowded audiences. The exposition as a whole is exceedingly interesting and cannot fail of being beneficial.

If any superintendents have not yet sent in their reports will they kindly do so immediately? Mrs. Hoffman will be in Chicago by the last of next week, and we wish to have the Annual Reports ready for distribution not later than December 1st. All announcements of plans for next year's campaign will very soon be made in this and the Treasurer's column. Those desiring Annual Reports should order them at once. Will superintendents also kindly send in any changes in their department associates by next mail, if possible? Both the Minutes and the Annual Leaflet should be out before January 1st, and their correctness or incorrectness must depend upon the response given to this request.

It was my privilege to preach yesterday before the students of Clark University and Gammon Theological Seminary, and I have seldom known a more enjoyable service. As a guest in the beautiful home of Dr. and Mrs. Parks I am seeing the bright side of negro education in the South, and am filled both with hope and amazement at the mighty strides taken in so short a period. Surely, "the best is yet to be" in our national life if only righteousness and intelligence go hand in hand.

W. C. T. U. work in Georgia needs a revival. We are hoping to lay the foundation for one to-morrow.

Homeopathic—John R. Boynton, M. D., Pres.

Our treasurer has not yet forwarded to us her report for publication, which when it appears will be recognized as able, interesting and duly audited. In the meantime, we are glad to know that workers are exerting themselves in lines that will help her report next year.

From Massachusetts, Illinois and Nebraska, come inquiries and orders for literature in the interest of extending the usefulness of the hospital.

Mrs. Sarah M. Hornby makes the following practical suggestions, sandwiched in with information: "The hospital is doing very nicely, patients coming and going, which keeps us all busy. The unions are sending in supplies in the way of fruits, jellies, apples, potatoes and cases of eggs, all thankfully received. These supplies aid the work very much, more than those dear women have any idea of.

"It is difficult to get strictly fresh eggs here. Patients cannot eat packed ones. So when a union sends a case, the sick folks enjoy them, many preferring them to meat. Some unions have egg socials, the admission being a dozen or more eggs. Quite an idea! If any union would like empty egg cases we can furnish them, for we have several on hand. We also can furnish a few empty cans. In sending boxes or barrels if the friends would always remember to direct to the Hospital, 1619 Diversey Ave., and prepay charges to the hospital, and always put an address inside the box, so that we may know to whom to acknowledge receipt of the same, there would not be so many donations recorded on our books as unknown.

"L. T. L's often ask what is needed. Wash cloths made of Turkish toweling always are in demand, also table napkins, bureau scarfs; money with which to purchase table-cloths for the dining-room. Perhaps some W or Y would like to send $10 to purchase a set of chairs for the dining-room; dishes are constantly needed. The Y room needs a new rug."

Miss Frances E. Willard honored the trustees and medical staff by her presence with them on Saturday, November 9.

Publisher's Notes

Again, a word for "Do Everything." It seems advisable to issue an American edition, so great is the demand for this popular manual of work. The new edition will contain the group of World's officers and the picture of the Polyglot Petition guarded by our two leaders, Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. The price will be a trifle higher than the English edition, and will be sent postpaid for thirty-five cents. Those preferring the English edition can order direct from Mrs. Ward Poole, Memorial Hall, Farringdon street, London, E. C. All other orders should be sent to Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple. Orders now on hand will be filled for twenty-five cents.

There was so much of the Christ spirit in the sessions of the Convention that the display of Christmas gifts is especially fitting for the Convention Number, and the list on the outside cover will bear careful inspection. Our assortment of books, booklets and calendars has never been as choice as this year, and an early order will be promptly filled from the stock, which cannot always be duplicated.

Home Hints

Fig paste. Chop some figs very fine, knead into a portion of the fondant (for which directions are given in this column) roll the mass on a moulding board sprinkled with sugar. Cut into small squares.

Sugar dates. Wipe the dates very dry and clean, remove the seeds and fill the dates with vanilla or chocolate flavored fondant.

Almond creams. Use the whole almond meats. Blanch by pouring over them boiling water and letting them stand until the skins will peel off easily. Cover each almond with fondant and roll in powdered or granulated sugar.

Chocolate creams. Shape the fondant into small balls the size of a marble, and stand in a cold place ten or fifteen minutes before rolling in the paste. To make the paste shave the chocolate with a knife and place over the steam from a teakettle until melted. Dip the creams one at a time in the melted chocolate and lay them on oiled paper. If the cream balls are the right consistency they can be picked up on a hat pin and dipped.

English walnut creams. Make a lozenge of the fondant and lay a half walnut meat on one or both sides.

The fondant used in making all the many varieties of French cream candy is the same and is very easily prepared. In these days of adulteration in sugar, and of poisonous coloring matters used in much of the manufactured candy, it is safer and much cheaper to make candy at home. The making of it may furnish many an attractive evening's entertainment for the children and young people of the family. For the fondant take the white of one egg, a tablespoonful of cold water, flavor with vanilla, and into these stir one pound of confectioner's sugar, working with the hands until smooth.

There are many varieties of palms which will thrive through the winter in a room where there is no sunshine, a north window being better for their growth than any other. Ferns also make beautiful and thrifty plants in a shady room after they have perfected their fronds. Nothing adds more to the artistic finish of a room than jardeniers holding a graceful fern or palm.

The custom of having the desserts served at the table by the lady of the house is much prettier than having them dished in the kitchen by a servant. It is often desirable to bring the pudding on in the pan in which it has been baked. If you are not the fortunate owner of one of the pretty modern pudding dishes with the movable pan, use a granite ware or porcelain dish; it may be made presentable by folding smoothly around it a fine white napkin. Cover the pan entirely and pin the napkin securely.

We will be glad to receive from any of the W. C. T. U. workers, suggestions along any lines properly included under the head of Home Hints. The best ways of doing any work about the house, the care of books, carpets, furniture, dishes, clothing, etc. It is not our purpose to make this a column for recipes, but a few will appear each week and contributions of those which have been well tested will be gladly received. A subscriber asks that temperance hints for the care of the sick, and preparation of tempting food and drinks for them be given through this medium. Help us to make this a most useful department of The Union Signal.

Life-power or Character, Culture and Conduct. By Arthur T. Pierson, D. D.

Dr. Pierson looks into life with keen, spiritual vision and has, in this rare book, uttered words of warning and wisdom touching those things that make or mar man's life-power. "The Elements and Secrets of Power," "The Power of a Presiding Purpose," "The Use and Abuse of Books," "The Genius of Industry," "The Ethics of Amusement" and "The Inspiration of Ideals" are the suggestive titles of six inspiring chapters.

The Octave of Blessing. By Rev. Frank S. Arnold.

This most helpful book is "a present day application of the beatitudes," one chapter being devoted to each "blessed." The author's simple, direct exposition is full of strength and sweetness, and his applications are practical in the truest sense of the word. "There must be," he says, "a return to the simplicity and purity of life as enjoined in the beatitudes, defined more exactly in the process of the Sermon on the Mount, and adequately presented in the perfect life and character of Jesus of Nazareth. Here and there a soul has succeeded in loosing itself from its trammels and getting into the conditions that make peace and happiness." The volume also includes three sermons on "Laws of Soul Growth."

Townsend Harris: First American Envoy in Japan. By William Elliott Griffis.

Valuable historically and intensely interesting from many points of view is this work compiled from the journal and letters of Mr. Harris. The book fills the gap in history "between Commodore Perry and Lord Elgin" and is an account, rich in detail, of the difficulties encountered by Mr. Harris in his endeavors to unite on a friendly and business basis, the interests of the two countries. Incidentally, the journal account gives many descriptions of Japanese manners and customs forty years ago, together with their secretive attitude toward the United States. In connection with this we quote from the closing chapter of the volume: "Two coincident events compel contrast between the hermit nation of Townsend Harris' day and the new Asiatic power of our own times. Then deception and weakness hobbled behind a fence of shame. Now truth and strength walk together in the highway. On this day —May, 1895—triumphant Japan and humbled China, at Chi-fu, ratify a treaty of peace. At this date, also, lies on our table, Japan's ninth annual revelation of facts. The Imperial government now openly publishes, to the full measure of its ability to furnish, what once was wholly concealed."

Southern Heroes; The Friends in War Time. By Fernando G. Cartland. With an introduction by Benjamin F. Trueblood, LL. D.

Here is a volume that will be received gladly by a large circle of readers, but perhaps by none more so than those who now stand for the principle of peace. Thousands outside of the Friends' persuasion are uncompromisingly committed to this principle and the department of peace and arbitration in the W. C. T. U. has done much to forward this movement which is surely an earnest of the day when throughout God's world there shall be no more war. The first chapter of Southern Heroes states the foundation of the faith of the Friends with a swift review of the growth of the peace principle from the day of George Fox to the breaking out of the war. The second chapter opens with the arrival of the Friends in America. These are followed by twenty-two chapters of thrilling interest, the opinions of the leading thinkers of war days upon the subject of slavery, the attitude of the North and the South toward non-combatants, individual experiences of many Friends who were summoned to serve in the army, but who, in spite of threats and imposed sufferings, would not fight nor help forward the war, etc., etc. The book contains over five hundred pages, with some illustrations of interest. Benjamin F. Trueblood, LL. D., who has written the introduction is secretary of the American Peace Society.

Signal Notes

THE drink bill is estimated at a billion dollars, and yet there are tens of thousands of people living on the charity of those who do not drink.

IT will be a surprise to many to learn that there are no national holidays in the United States, their creation and appointment being left entirely with the states. The acts of Congress regarding public holidays all relate solely to the District of Columbia.

SPECIAL Sundays have become so prevalent in London that it is scarcely possible to spend a Sabbath in the great metropolis that has not been specially dedicated. In October, in three successive weeks, were observed, "Children's Sunday," "London Citizens' Sunday," and "Museum Sunday."

THE last obstacle to liberal legislation dealing with ecclesiastical affairs has been recently removed by the Hungarian House of Magnates, which has adopted a provision of the freedom of worship bill, giving permission to leave or join any communion, Judaism not excepted, or to declare nonprofession of any creed.

IT is authoritatively stated that at the dinner given Khama and his brother chiefs, by the mayor, on the occasion of their recent visit to Liverpool, champagne was served. As the South African prohibitionist and home protector had visited Liverpool to ask the aid of the people to keep the drink from his country, the setting of wine before them was exceedingly discourteous, to say the least.

THE Scottish Reformer tells of a disgraceful procession in Glasgow recently. A Belfast firm having paid over £50,000 revenue, thought to advertise this fact by a parade of their wares, comprising thirty floats heaped with casks and cases of spirits. The unadvertised effects of their product from the poor-houses, prisons, jails, asylums, wrecked homes, if brought into contrast before enlightened Christians, would speedily put a stop to such a sad parade of soul and body destroying liquor.

THE executive committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. church at its late session held in St. Louis, changed the name of its official organ, The Heathen Woman's Friend, to The Woman's Missionary Friend, thus removing the invective applied to our sisters of the east. The $326.000 appropriation for missionary purposes for the ensuing year surpasses any amount heretofore voted by a society of women. Miss Mabel Hartford, the single American missionary who escaped from the Kucheng massacre of August 1, was a distinguished guest of the committee.

ONE of the best men of our time is Orrington Lunt, president of the board of trustees of the Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. From his boyhood until now, when he is over eighty years of age, his whole life has been a choice product of Christianity. Born and bred in the prohibition state of Maine, he has in his body and soul the strength and wholesomeness of which the pine trees are emblems. This good man was recently very ill, so much so that he was not expected to live but a few hours. As he lay there surrounded by loving friends, his daughter noticed that in his breathing there seemed to be a certain rhythm and after some time she was so impressed by this that she said, "Father, what makes this?" laying her hand upon his breast, whereupon he opened his eyes and with much difficulty said, "I cannot sing, but I can breathe a hymn to God."

THE Chicago Tribune sounds a warning note against the "all night saloon" in these words: "The police department could not show a better reason of existence than by waging determined warfare upon the dramshops that remain open after midnight. There is no question of puritanism, of personal liberty or of dram-selling concerned. The question is one of safety to life and property. The 'all night' saloon is at once the breeding-place and the refuge of crime. It sends out highwaymen to molest the lonely wayfarer and invites them to safe refuge after the perpetration of their crimes. The records of the police department will show that periods of 'all night' saloons have been periods of lawlessness, of garroting and outrage. Close them up and keep them closed!" Query: If the "all night" saloon is so malodorous when more than half the world is asleep, why has not the stench of the "all day" saloon, which assails the entire working world, reached the nostrils of so discerning a journal?

Indiana Letter.

February 8th, 1895.

The Dr. J. H. McLean Medicine Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen: I feel it my duty to inform you of the great good I have received from Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm. I am sure it saved my life. I suffered for several years with Bright's Disease, aggravated by gravel in the left kidney. About two years ago the trouble got so bad that I could not leave my bed; had night sweats, extreme weakness, chills and my flesh had a blanched look. I did not expect to get well again. Eighteen months ago I began using the Liver and Kidney Balm. I used at first two bottles, which helped me so much I could leave the bed and go about my household duties; so I continued with it. I also began to pass the gravel. In all I passed five stones. I am now feeling entirely cured, but still taking the Balm occasionally to make sure. Doctor, I am unable to express my gratitude to God for my restoration to health, and I owe it, even my present existence, to your Liver and Kidney Balm. It is a grand medicine.

Yours respectfully, MRS. H. J. D.,
CANNELLTON, IND.

At the request of the writer of the above the name is omitted, but it will be furnished in strict confidence to any who wish to investigate this case.

A MAN with a poor appetite is sometimes a martyr. He goes to the steak from a sense of duty.

HOAX—I see they have a new name for those high buildings which are being erected.

JOAX—Indeed. What is it?

HOAX—They are called serial buildings, because they are continued stories.

A LADY entered her little daughter's bedroom, and seeing a rent in the pillow-case, asked, "Why, Lena, how came that hole in the pillow-case?" The little girl replied, "I don't know. I guess the pillow outgrowed it."

SINGERS AND ARTISTS GENERALLY are users of "Brown's Bronchial Troches" for Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness and Throat Irritations. They afford instant relief. Avoid imitations.

CHARLEY, the three-year-old pet of the household, stood an attentive and interested looker-on while grandma was paring potatoes for dinner. Presently she made a sign of discontinuing the work with a single potato left unpeeled and unwashed. The little fellow reached into the pan, took it in his chubby hand, and turning his bright eyes in an appealing glance to grandma's face, exclaimed, "Take 'im c'oes off and give 'im baff, too."

The Second Summer,

many mothers believe, is the most precarious in a child's life; generally it may be true, but you will find that mothers and physicians familiar with the value of the Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk do not so regard it.

THE mouth is a hotbed of toothaches, the bunghole of oratory, and a baby's crowning glory. It is the patriotism's fountain-head and the toolchest for pie. Without it the politician would be a wanderer on the face of the earth, and the cornetist would go down to an unhonored grave. It is the grocer's friend, the orator's pride and the dentist's hope.

The best proof is that the Church Kidney Cure Company, 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, will send you treatment by mail prepaid free, if you send them your name and address. Daily Tourist Sleeping car service is also maintained by this line between Chicago and San Francisco and Los Angeles, completely equipped berths in upholstered Tourist Sleepers being furnished at a cost of only $6 each from Chicago to the Pacific Coast. Through trains leave Chicago for California at 6:00 p. m. and 10:45 p. m. daily, after arrival of trains of connecting lines from the East and South.

MAMMA—Robbie, does your ear ache?

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

To all our Folks

So far as I can learn, we are not giving Christmas presents to those who already have more things than they know what to do with, but we try to give to those that need help

Now here is a Conundrum Who needs help more than the man who votes to legalize the liquor traffic or the woman who doesn't care whether he so votes or not?

Therefore I hereby promise to give to ten persons, as a Christmas present this year, fifty two visits of the Union Signal to help them to be more alive toward God and Man by voting to protect the Homes of this blessed Country from its accursed Saloons.

Will you not do the Same or something Smaller please say Yes at least One Dollar's worth, and rejoice the heart of Your loyal Comrade

THE THREE APPRENTICES OF MOON STREET, by Georges Montorgueil, translated from the French by Huntington Smith, is a story for boys.

The three apprentices, "Johnnie," "John" and "Jack," of the worthy jeweler, Charles Dupont's establishment, are three as lively boys as were ever put into the pages of a book. Their adventures and experiences are related by the author with inexhaustible drollery. The boys have their faults but also their virtues, and while the former get them into almost impossible scrapes, their honesty, good nature and wit generally extricate them with nothing worse than mortification.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Grand Master Workman Sovereign has been reëlected head of the Knights of Labor.

The death of Dr. Cornelius V. A. Vandyck, a noted missionary and Arabic scholar, is reported from Beyroot, Syria.

The trial of Jabez Balfour and others for the Liberator Company (building association) frauds in London began last week.

American missionaries in Smyrna will receive welcome protection by the presence of the United States warship Minneapolis in that port.

Miss Mary A. Lathbury has won the first prize in the Hull House competition for the best song of cheer for the elevation of earth's toilers.

The release from jail of Eugene Debs, the leader of the great strike, occurred last Friday. A mass-meeting was held at Battery D, and the labor unions of Chicago and vicinity gave him a rousing welcome.

Chickering Hall, New York, was the scene of a large Armenian meeting, which urged our government to put an end to the intolerable state of affairs in the Orient. Hon. Seth Low, Rev. Dr. John Hall and others were the speakers.

MISS WILLARD requests us to say that her steady address and that of Miss Gordon is Evanston, Ill., and that wherever they may roam in the next few months, letters will reach them with least loss of time if addressed to that place.

HEREAFTER the UNION SIGNAL will have a corner headed "Where Our Speakers Are," in which lecturers and organizers will be given three lines for announcements. They are asked to give dates and places where they can be addressed, also to name the dates for which they are open for engagements, so that parties desiring their services may communicate directly with them. W. C. T. U. speakers and organizers are requested to send such announcements direct to THE UNION SIGNAL.

MRS. MARION B. BAXTER, who has conducted the Willard Hall meetings so successfully and written the Noontide Links for THE UNION SIGNAL, retires from that work to become financial agent and promoter of auxiliary leagues for the National W. C. T. U., according to the plan of finance as set forth by Miss Willard in THE UNION SIGNAL of November 14. Mrs. Baxter will also act as National lecturer and organizer. She ranks among our best speakers and is already planning a series of engagements in the eastern states.

IN replying to the address of the white-ribbon fraternal delegates, General Master Workman Sovereign said that the W. C. T. U. had given repeated proof of their sympathy with the cause of labor, and that it was a great pleasure to the assembly and to the order in general to know that the great president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was a member of the Knights of Labor. "While not pledged to the prohibition of the liquor traffic," he said, "we draw the line at the saloon-keeper, the gambler and all the influences that corrupt the mass of the people." There is one influence that corrupts the people which we would be glad to see this powerful order combating, and that is the influence which entrenches the saloon in our social and political system and gives it governmental protection. Our sympathy with the cause of labor prompts the desire to see the labor vote turned against the drink traffic.

THE National W. C. T. U. Convention has, as was to be expected, called forth no little animadversion from the press for its do-everything methods. The W. C. T. U., we are told, cannot long survive its present suicidal policy of "entangling alliances" with other reforms, and it is a matter of sincere regret with some of our friends that "it has come in these latter days to fritter away its energies in a windmill fight with pretty much everything above ground instead of sticking to the point and accomplishing one thing." Now, though we do not expect outsiders to view our organization and its work from the angle of vision of an insider, it must be plain to all who will take pains to look into the record of W. C. T. U. work that if each year it becomes more and more inclusive, it becomes also each year more and more practical; each year its reports show marked progress all along the line. Never before in its history has the W. C. T. U. greater reason to feel encouraged and to be satisfied with its do-everything policy than now, for never before has its annual Convention so clearly demonstrated the growing strength and influence of the white ribbon movement. If the "one thing" to be accomplished is the annihilation of the liquor traffic (though white-ribboners are coming to see that even that end is only a means to a still greater end) the W. C. T. U. has every encouragement to stick to its present policy, every reason to "press with vigor on" doing good according to its present plan, for, as was well said by one of its leaders in Convention, the signs of God's approval are everywhere apparent.

IN the first copies of Miss Willard's annual address it is stated that funds for Ramabai's school in India, should be sent to Mrs. Judith Andrews, Rutland Square, Boston. This is a mistake which we hasten to correct. Mrs. Andrews having moved from Boston, in which city are the headquarters of the Ramabai parent association, the treasurer is now Mr. E. Hayward Ferry, to whom all moneys for that purpose should be forwarded.

THE fact—if it be a fact—that the two noted criminals, Durant and Holmes, are total abstainers is being made the most of by the liquor papers. They point to them triumphantly as quite upsetting the "theory" of Prohibitionists that the liquor traffic produces nine-tenths of our criminals. In short, the great ado they make about it shows that they regard them as very remarkable cases indeed—as doubtless they do the entire one-tenth of the criminal population which does not owe its downfall to intoxicating drink.

IT is but due Miss Willard to state that the removal of the press department to National Headquarters, and endowing it with an appropriation sufficient to carry it on in a more aggressive way, has not only been one of her pet plans for years, but is made possible only through her great generosity. She stated expressly at Baltimore that she would receive but half her salary this year. When the executive committee positively refused to consider such a proposition she held her own counsel, but did not change one whit her purpose. At the general officers' meeting on the 13th inst., she expressed her unalterable intention to place $1,000 of her salary for this year at the disposal of certain designated departments and according to amounts specified, the press department to receive the largest share. By this means it is possible for National Headquarters to so increase its office staff that this most important work can be carried on without detriment to the other interests centered there. It is, however, also due the new press superintendent to say that not one additional dollar goes to her through this plan. She stands related to the department simply as its advisory head; the detail work will be almost wholly carried on by her efficient associate, Mrs. M. B. Horning.

THE movements toward united action on the part of temperance forces are among the most cheering signs of the times. Two "calls" having this end in view are before us. One is issued by the Anti-saloon League of the District of Columbia for an Anti-saloon convention to be held in Washington, D. C., December 17, 18 and 19, and is signed by a long list of prominent clergymen, representatives of temperance societies and other organizations. The other is sent out by men and women representing various reform organizations, and state and national party officials. It is addressed to the national committees of the Prohibition, the People's and the Socialist-Labor parties, and is as follows: "In accordance with action taken at the National Reform Conference, held on Staten Island last July, and in pursuance of the objects of that conference, namely, to effect a political union of the reform forces of the nation, we, the undersigned, hereby request each national committee above mentioned to appoint a special committee of three, for the purpose of conferring and calling a joint conference to be held in Chicago, or some other central point, at some date before March 1, 1896, to consider the subject of a political union of the reform forces." The first movement looks toward the abolishment of the saloon on strictly non-partisan lines; the other is an effort to secure a "political union" of all reform forces. Both are advance movements and will recieve the indorsement of every foe of the saloon, but the thought suggests itself, which will cause most concern among the liquor forces—which is the rum power most likely to fear and to turn its heaviest artillery against?

ENTER HIS GATES WITH THANKSGIVING.

BY ALICE MAY DOUGLAS.

Enter His gates with thanksgiving,
Into His temple of song.
Sackcloth exchange for rejoicing,
Gladness to earth doth belong.

Enter His gates with thanksgiving,
Come to the feast of His love.
Feed on His pleasures eternal,

MISS HADLEY'S THANKSGIVING.

BY MARY F. BUTTS.

Closer is He than breathing,
Nearer than hands and feet.

Anne Hadley stood at the table in her neat kitchen, cutting up a pumpkin for pies, when a neighbor dropped in saying:

"I've just come from the Carters. Mis' Carter's quite poorly. I must say I don't wonder, for of all the shif'less houses that's the beater."

"I'll take her a loaf of my last baking and a glass of apple jelly," said Miss Hadley.

"Well, it's a blessing if somebody'll give 'em a lift," was the reply. "But why don't they brace up and be somebody?"

Anne Hadley was not a woman to put off a piece of work that she had once determined upon, so it was within the hour that she started on her errand. As she came in sight of the shabby establishment a critical spirit arose. But she put it down. "I will try for just this once to be simply neighborly," she said to herself. As she approached the house she saw three or four unkempt children playing under an old apple tree.

"To think that they should have so many and my only one should be taken," she reflected as she listened to their ringing voices. But she summoned up a cheerful manner as she entered the house and gave her neighbor the tempting little offering.

"La!" said Mrs. Carter, visibly affected by Anne's unlooked for kindness, "how did you come to guess what I wanted most? I haven't had a speck of appetite for three or four days. He isn't much better off than I am. Did you ever see such warm weather in November, Miss Hadley?"

"Indian summer," replied Anne, removing her hat and fanning herself with it.

Mrs. Carter looked at the bread and exclaimed over its whiteness and lightness. "If I could cook like that," she said, "I think he would have a better feelin' stummick. He's always complainin' that his victuals don't set nohow. But I can't make such bread as that, an' there's no use tryin'."

"I'm not so sure that there's no use trying," said Anne, feeling an altogether new interest in the incompetent housewife.

"It does seem strange that Johnnie should a-been took when you was so well fitted to bring him up," Mrs. Carter went on. She had seated herself and begun sewing a patch on a pair of very ragged little trousers. "An' you meant so well by him, intendin' to send him to college an' all that. I always thought he'd pay you back for all your trouble, he was such a smart, willin' boy. But then there's no use 'lottin' on anything in this world."

Miss Hadley stayed half an hour, then rose to take her leave.

"Wait a minute, Miss Anne," said the hostess. "Mahaly, fill a basket with them wild grapes the boys picked. They make beautiful sauce, Miss Hadley. I do wish you wouldn't hurry so."

"I have made a long visit," replied Anne.

"I wish you would come over oftener," said Mrs. Carter. "I often think about ye, there all alone."

The woman's face shone with genuine sympathy as she spoke. Her eyes were large and dark, and lighted as they were with friendliness, Miss Hadley was attracted by them as she never had been before.

She took the grapes from Mahala's hand and started for home. As she walked along the pleasant country road the sorrow that was her constant companion weighed heavily upon her. Thanksgiving was coming and she was alone. The bright, brave, affectionate nephew upon whom she had set her heart, her hopes, was—where? She suddenly felt very tired and old. She sat down to rest for a moment under a wayside tree. She took the bit of newspaper which Mahala had tucked about the grapes and glanced idly over its contents.

"Closer is He than breathing,
Nearer than hands and feet."

This bit of verse suddenly arrested her attention and sent a thrill to her heart. She read it over and over. It was but a couplet filling a tiny space at the end of a column. To the longing soul of the reader it came like a solemn, authoritative voice. Miss Hadley had heard about God all her life but the reality of His fatherhood had never entered her heart. All at once she began wondering why she had always lived without Him; that is, without recognizing Him. "Because my heart was full of earthly love, maybe," she said to herself.

She felt a little less sad, a little more hopeful as she once more entered the solitary house. She realized, as she went about through the large, pleasant rooms what a big house it was and all for one elderly woman. New thoughts came to her; thoughts of the blessings that had always been hers, thoughts of those others, her brothers and sisters, ignorant, untrained, unhelped.

A week had passed and Miss Hadley had made a batch of mince pies. "From habit," she said, since she did not feel as if she could eat a mouthful of them.

"They wouldn't come amiss with the Carters," she thought as she set them in a row on her pantry shelf—a shelf white with many scourings, and well furnished with good things. "All those hearty boys, too, how do they ever get filled up?"

Just then there was a voice at her elbow. Anne looked up and there stood Jack Carter in the pantry door. He held in his hand a basket of cranberries.

"Mother sent you these," he said, smiling brightly as he spoke.

"Thank you—let me see, what shall I call you? I believe I have forgotten which one you are."

"My name's Johnnie, but they call me Jack, mostly," replied the boy.

The little fellow was barefooted and wore a ragged jacket. Miss Hadley's heart warmed to him as he stood waiting for her to empty the basket. "Sit down at the table," she said, "here's something nice for you."

She spread out a napkin, set a plate and knife and fork, and cut a quarter from a delicious pie. Jack had never eaten anything so good. When he had finished the last crumb, he asked Miss Hadley if there wasn't something that he could do for her. He was so sincere, so cordial, that Anne surprised herself by saying yes, she needed help about some moving and cleaning in the attic.

She had not thought it possible that she could have "one of those Carter boys" among her precious possessions,—but here was Jack carrying out baskets and bales, sweeping down cobwebs, moving heavy pieces of furniture,—doing everything so deftly, so gaily, that Miss Hadley was reminded of "Johnnie" more than once. She could scarcely keep back the tears when she heard a clear, melodious whistle down in the yard where the boy was beating some bits of carpet.

"I shall miss him when he goes home," she thought. But Jack did not go home that night, nor for many nights. In coming down the steep garret stairs with an armful of old clothes, he tripped over some dragging skirt or sleeve, and fell headlong. When he reached the bottom it was found that he had a broken arm.

A calamity was it? Perhaps so.

"What in the world shall I do with him?" was Miss Hadley's first thought. But even as she asked the question, she felt a glow of courage, of enterprise to which she had long been a stranger. There was somebody, a boy, a bright, loving-hearted boy to work for, to nurse, to watch over. She seemed to have Johnnie back again.

Fortunately there were neighbors not far away. A messenger was sent for the doctor, the arm was set and Jack's family apprised of the accident. The invalid was quartered in "Johnny's room," a big, bright, east chamber with pictures on the papered walls, and books in the tall bookcase.

Ah, those pictures, the fresh muslin curtains, the old-fashioned open fireplace with its brass andirons, and the leaping flames that Miss Anne kindled every morning, and above all the books—I cannot tell you what they were to Jack Carter. Lying there in the snow white bed, with a great bunch of chrysanthemums on the little table beside him, he felt himself to be in a new world. And when he read his first boy's book, a well thumbed story of adventure that had been a favorite with Johnny, he got a hint of what a vast world we live in, and what it might be to learn, to travel, to be a strong, brave, earnest man. There was need of help now that there was an invalid in the house, and Mahala was summoned. She, too, found herself in a region of wonders. Miss Anne's kitchen was so different from her mother's, all the appointments of the house were so delicate, so neat, so orderly, that she was at first almost afraid to stir. Her sensitiveness to the new conditions made her awkward. Almost the first thing she did was to break one of Anne's favorite bits of china.

"I don't know how I bore her careless ways as well as I did," said Miss Hadley afterwards to a friend. "But I found out that 'twasn't real carelessness. The child meant all right. I never should a-found it out though if I hadn't been patient. When I didn't scold, whatever she did, she sorter come round an' was just as stiddy handed as I am myself, and it's a real wonder how quickly she learnt my ways, an' 'specially my ways o' cookin'. Why, she made as nice a loaf of bread for her mother as anybody need wish for. I guess 'twas a revelation to Mrs. Carter."

But Anne Hadley herself was in a new world. We cannot take God into our hearts without sharing Him with our neighbors. We cannot preëmpt the sunshine. Love is universal. The sky's blue arch includes all in its blessing and protection. The rain falls for the just and the unjust. Anne was being educated in the school of Christ. She had borne with Mahala's "stupidity," and the girl had proved herself not stupid. The seed is "dead" till we put it in right conditions. So qualities, powers, feelings, are dormant in many instances till they meet the warmth of sympathy.

All at once Miss Hadley woke to the consciousness that she was not alone. She had two warm-hearted, devoted young housemates. She had, indeed, a family to prepare a Thanksgiving dinner for.

It is hard to be overburdened, but it is harder still to have no burden. There was a feeling very much like joy at Anne's heart when she ordered the big fat turkey. The yellow pumpkins seemed to laugh in Mahala's face as she peeled the gay wheels and cut them into bits for stewing. There must be plenty of everything, for the whole tribe of Carters was to be invited to the Thanksgiving dinner. The cranberries that Jack had contributed on the day of his fall were stewed, sifted and moulded into forms of ruby jelly. The cook stove seemed to understand what was going on and put itself upon its best behavior. Never were pies a more golden brown; never did cake rise more promptly to its proper height; never was pudding more rich and plummy. And all this time Mahala was learning. Through sympathy with her daughter Mrs. Carter was learning. When Mahala told her how to make bread she listened. She tidied the house that it might look nice when Mahala came home for her short visits. And such a making and mending, such a scrubbing and rubbing as there was when the dinner invitation came, had never been seen, I dare say, in the Carter household before. Everybody woke up to the dignity and grandeur of the occasion. They were going to Miss Hadley's and they felt that they were somebody. As for Jack, he gave the little Carters lessons in deportment whenever they spent a half hour in his room, which was not seldom. He showed them the books and told them stories till they, too, realized that there was a world outside of their own little neighborhood, and that they must try to make men and women of themselves.

"Well, I never!" exclaimed Mrs. Carter, when she saw the Thanksgiving dinner.

"He" had a job twenty miles away and could not be present. "It is just as well," reflected the wife. "He'd like enough spill the gravy, an' I don't believe even Miss Anne could git him to use a napkin. An' to think how she has set this table, it fairly glitters an' shines, an' even the vegetables is ornamental. Mahaly's catchin' on, I can see that, an' Jack has got to be quite a gentleman, livin' up there in that grand room an' waited on as if he was the president's son."

"Closer is He than breathing,
Nearer than hands and feet."

The words were close to Anne Hadley's consciousness all through that crisp, sunshiny Thanksgiving day. The Presence was with her, and her guests in their ignorance and poverty felt its cheer and uplift. That dinner was a true communion service.

Before Mrs. Carter and her brood went home it was decided that Jack and Mahala should stay with Miss Hadley through the winter. Anne felt that she could not spare this second Johnnie and she needed Mahala to help wait on the boy.

"'Tisn't likely she'll let 'em go when spring comes," said Mrs. Carter to the children as they went home in the frosty evening.

The "shiftless" mother carried home with her as a keepsake a gilt-edged card with this motto written upon it:

"Closer is He than breathing,
Nearer than hands and feet."

It was ornamented with a pretty border of pansies. Miss Hadley did good work now and then with her pencil, and the card was very attractive. Mrs. Carter fastened it by one corner inside the frame of the sitting-room looking-glass where she could read it at every turn.

"It was He that put it into Miss Anne's heart to be so good to all of us," she said, "and with His help I mean to make this house a more suitable place for Him to come into."

THE NIGHTINGALE PSALM.

"Thou standest alone as the nightingale sings."—E. B. B.

BY ELLA GILBERT IVES.

One need not hunt for this winged lyric as did Burroughs for its prototype in English lanes. For three thousand years its melody has been heard in the garden of the Lord, and in many a life its celestial music, falling for the first time upon the inward ear, has marked an epoch as great as the breaking up of winter and the coming of spring.

The twenty-third Psalm alone merits the name which stands unrivaled in the world of song. That great preacher who narrowly missed being a poet, Henry Ward Beecher, with happy insight gave the title—so felicitous that it seems like a discovery—"The nightingale psalm." To countless multitudes this lyric has been not only a herald of the soul's spring, but a "song in the night," its rarest strains evoked, like the nightingale's upon the thorn, by pain. Who has not felt the silence of this psalm in hours of gladness—in the daylight of life! The music is all there, locked in the dumb breast of the nightingale; darkness will release it. When the sun goes down and gathering shades silence the crowd of light-hearted singers, birds of the sunshine, then God's sacred, solitary song of unspeakable tenderness and beauty will break upon the listening heart.

Michelet has nobly interpreted the bird from an impassioned intimacy with the "children of the sky." He calls the nightingale the artist among birds, the only creator, each song being a fresh improvisation. Is it not true of this lyric, this nightingale psalm, that it never repeats? Each quickened need of the heart is met by a fresh response to its yearning. Happy the soul whose eager listening compels a new song to float out upon the silence!

For this psalm is not only a herald of spring, a song in the night, a fresh improvisation, but it is also a song of love. In the solemn stillness of bereavement one who hearkens to the theme, "I shall not want," hears soft reverberations from the hills of God. "I shall not want—what?" cries the soul. "Any good thing," is the Holy Spirit's answer from the Word.

"And the dark things must be good things
Since He sends them," softly sings
This sky-angel; till his ardor
Gives my halting spirit wings;
And I pierce the cloudy portal;
Come out on the other side;
Find that light of Love immortal
Flings the shadows where we hide.

Listen to this bird lyric during some pause in life's activities, when the "awhile in some desert place" grows wearisomely long. "He maketh me to lie down," sings the nightingale. "He maketh me," is the soft refrain, repeated o'er and o'er, until the soul's discords cease, and the void in life's stir and stress is filled with heavenly harmonies. Then the wearied spirit answers,

Father, I knew my steps were ordered by thy love;
I saw the guiding hand that led me from above;
But now an unseen touch arrests my onward tread;
A blessed will, I trust it still, appoints me stops instead.

And thou, dear wanderer from the fold of God, listen to this strain of surpassing hope: "He restoreth my soul. He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness." That hymn so dear to the Church militant, "He leadeth me, oh, blessed thought!" is but a variation of this nightingale strain, from the heart of one who had wandered. Perhaps that richly-endowed nature was suffered to fall, that it might sing of God's restoring grace and guiding hand, with a pathos born in the wilderness.

Surely the twenty-third Psalm would never have been written, but for the wonderful vicissitudes of a life in which clouds chased the sunshine, often into appalling gloom. The humble life of the shepherd lad was set to music by the riper experience of God's gracious shepherding of the soul in hours of transcendent need. The captive nightingale is said to burst into enchanting song when the light is suddenly restored. Light in the darkness was the inspiration of this nightingale psalm.

"AS ONE WOMAN TO ANOTHER."

BY PAUL M. STRAYER.

This title of a recent serial by Mr. Frank Stockton has a deeper significance than perhaps appeared on the surface, an inner meaning, which, in his pleasing recital, the author had no occasion to develop. It suggests this question: What is the position of one woman to another, and wherein does it differ from that of one man to another, or of woman to man?

On the whole, woman is less charitable in her judgments than are men. Perhaps one influence that tends to make her more exacting is the relation of maternity, with the consequent duty of correcting the slightest wrong in her children. Besides, her personal standard of purity and chastity is higher than that of men. She lives on a loftier plane, and through a clearer, thinner atmosphere observes those about her. With keen vision she sees the imperfections of men and women alike, but as a rule, applies her exalted standard to her own sex alone—and that with an austerity amounting almost to heartlessness. Yet she will sometimes condone and even defend the shortcomings of man. Too often she requires but one thing in him, courage. To be brave covers a multitude of sins. Not to be brave renders him an object of pity. She likes to gauge him by the old standards of knight-errantry, frequently of the free-lance order. She demands too little of men. But even here she is outdone in lenity by man, who is exceedingly generous concerning his brothers' faults. There are those of his own that prompt him to clemency. Nor is he severe in judgment of the other sex. His sisters, and perhaps one or two others, are all whose actions he watches with critical eye. Love is not blind, but exaggerates faults as well as virtues.

That this leniency is the result of man's greater kindness is not the inference; rather is it the result of indifference. What cares he about his neighbors' actions provided they do not interfere with his own interests! He has not time nor disposition to question their behavior or to weigh it in the light of right and wrong. He cares more about what he himself stands for than his fellows. He commends or condemns less frequently than woman. His likes and dislikes—the final estimates of their object's worth—are not so pronounced as hers. Deal fairly with him and he inquires no further.

Now here is the difference. A woman judges the actions of another not as they affect her, but as they affect her sex. She has come to regard her sex as responsible for its every member. The individual honors or dishonors the class, and by the lofty standard of womanhood each judges the other. Such is not the case with men. We say of a man, "We couldn't expect better of him;" but on the other hand, "We looked for more from a woman." And so one woman is intolerant of another's wrong because it touches her. She will not forgive her sister's sin for fear she, herself, will feel its taint, will shut the door in her face lest the sin shadow her own home, is ready to stone her before the fair name of her sex be smirched. Thus, woman is a very Nemesis to her weaker sister, not from malice but from a sense of duty.

An offense once committed she can never live down. Where once she was trusted and loved she is now alien and outcast. Nor can she hope for reinstatement; she is ostracised for life. Yet the man is tolerated, and in a few years may regain the position he has forfeited.

In all this, I protest, woman is untrue to her own sex and false to ours. When she treats her erring sister thus, to save the good name of her sex, she betrays a faithlessness in her sex. It does not require to so entrench itself; its fame is secure. And to man she owes better treatment, not that he deserves it but needs it. Any palliation, any forbearance of his wrong is license for further wrong-doing. Woman's responsibility is great. The state of social purity is what she makes it. Public morals are largely in her hands.

Let her adopt one standard for all, and all will measure to it. Let her become mentor of both sexes rather than censor of her own.

DEGENERATION OR REGENERATION, WHICH?

BY W. XAVIER SUDDUTH, A. M., M. D.

It is a difficult task to dispassionately discuss a book of the character of Nordau's recent work on the supposed degeneracy of the human race. The scope of the work is so extensive that it embraces nearly every phase of human experience and exposes the frailties of nearly every individual member of society.

While it is true that the writer has ostensibly confined his analysis to literati and artists, whom he, in the main, pronounces degenerates, yet he makes all the followers and sympathizers of the several schools of literature and art equally degenerate, by inference at least, even if he does not directly charge them with degeneracy.

Nearly all the "reviews" that have been published up to the present time have shown evidence of the wide scope of Nordau's criticisms and have only too plainly borne the ear-marks of injured pride and personality.

The book is, the critics to the contrary notwithstanding, a most admirable one in the main and can be read with profit by most persons. The impression created on the mind of the reader will depend largely upon his special ideas of the origin and destiny of the race. If he holds to the common view of the "creation and fall" of man, then many of the views held by Nordau will find a sympathetic response in his heart. But if he happen to belong to either wing of the evolutionary school he will find much in the work to criticise.

Let us note a few of the points that seem to be vulnerable when judged from either point of view. In the first place Nordau, like many of the advocates of human degeneracy, fails to establish a standard. While it is true that in sociological investigation the widest scope must be permitted the investigator, and Nordau's researches should be no exception, yet one seeks in vain for some tangible ground upon which to stand in order to institute a comparison, for he finds none within the covers of the book that is at all comprehensive.

The second point is that history does not bear out the general conclusions presented in the work regarding race degeneracy. There undoubtedly exist at the present time many instances of individual depravity, both moral and physical, but never in the history of the world has society been so free from vice; never before has national culture reached such a high degree of excellency; no previous century has shown such marked intellectual, moral and physical development as ours; never in the history of man has intelligence been so widespread and the sum total of human knowledge so universal, and never has morality been so revered and virtue so well guarded as now. So true is this that individual cases of moral depravity stand out all the bolder in relief. The conviction of an Oscar Wilde emphasizes the virtue of the age rather than its degeneracy.

Even in physical development and courage this age far exceeds any previous period. The Greek athlete, were he living to-day, would fail to secure a place in many of our amateur performances, and the gladiator of the Roman arena would hesitate to take a position on our football teams. The only ground that permits a diagnosis of race degeneracy ranks man as a mere animal; then all intellectual development, other than such as suffices to perpetuate bodily existence, may be said to be abnormal, and the physical compensations that naturally follow brain development at the expense of the lower nature be held as undoubted evidence of degeneracy. Such a belief, however, would make the untutored savage from darkest Africa the true philosopher rather than the stoic of the civilization of the nineteenth century.

Then, again, in order logically to pronounce a condition abnormal, a normal standard must first be established. This our author fails to do, unless we accept mediocrity as such, which really seems to be the case. He mildly disclaims in advance the imputation that genius and degeneracy are synonymous terms, yet a close reading of the book forces one to that conclusion. He says on this point that "science does not assert that every genius is a lunatic; there are some geniuses of superabundant power whose high privilege consists in the possession of one or other extraordinarily developed faculty without the rest of their faculties falling short of the average standard." All others, he might have continued, who show evidence of phenomenal development in any one line are to be classed as degenerates. According to Nordau's definition of genius, the crop of geniuses has been very small, and will ever decrease as the sum total of human knowledge increases. In times not so remote it did not require such a high degree of erudition to gain the cognomen of genius as at the present day, but with the advance in general knowledge one must be a phenomenon, indeed, in order to maintain the title of genius, which according to Nordau, brands its possessor as a degenerate.

While it is true that physical weakness is a very common accompaniment of great erudition or genius, this is not to be wondered at, nor even counted as evidence of degeneracy in all cases. It is an open question whether subordination of the physical to the mental and spiritual nature is degeneration or regeneration. The decision of this point depends entirely upon what is considered the final destiny of man. If the Christ is to be taken as the highest type of perfected manhood, then physical abasement is regeneration, for He persistently held up the spiritual nature as the living embodiment of all that was worth living for. If, however, the untutored savage is the normal man, then each and every step towards civilization is a day's march toward degeneracy. On these points our author studiously avoids committing himself.

Another disappointing feature of the book is the small amount of attention devoted to the psychology of the subject. Considerable space is given to mysticism, but one looks in vain for any extended reference to the wave of occultism that is sweeping over the world.

From the opening to the closing chapter there is present a decided pessimistic tone. In the final chapter, however, the author, under the title of "Prognosis," tries to redeem himself, but succeeds only the more strongly in branding himself a pessimist of the first water. He says: "Humanity has to-day as much as ever the tendency to reject all that it cannot digest. If future generations come to find that the march of progress is too rapid for them they will, after a time, composedly give it up. . . . . The hysteria of to-day will not last; people will recover from their fatigue. The feeble and degenerate will perish; the strong will adapt themselves to the acquisitions of civilization, or will subordinate them to their own organic capacity."

On the whole, the work is a local study with local coloring, and the attempt to make its application general is forced, but I must protest against any attempt to pronounce the present civilization degenerate. I would say rather that there exists at the present time many aggravated instances of depravity in the individual, which stand out sharply against the sure and rapid regeneration of the race.

The telegrams will appear in full in the National Report, and we regret that there is space for publishing only a few of the many "best" sentences from the letters.

Rev. John Russell, founder of the Prohibition party writes: "I feel stronger each day in the belief that 'the Almighty has no attributes which can take part' with those who are opposed to us in this strife. We are certainly on the right line of battle."

Cardinal Gibbons: "The temperance cause is a most vital subject in our day as on it hangs social order with domestic peace and comfort."

Dr. Henry A. Delano: "God bless you and the great army that shall gather again beneath the white banner of the new womanhood and manhood."

Bishop John P. Newman: "You know my hearty cooperation with you in all your good works and especially with your noble organization."

Mrs. Youmans of Canada: "Shut in as I am from the world I retrospect the past and look out upon the present, constrained to believe that the world is vastly better through the instrumentality of the W. C. T. U."

Jennie Smith: "I greatly miss being in your midst, but grace is sufficient. So thankful I can meet with you in spirit. God bless each one of you. Isaiah 41 : 10 and 11."

Rev. Francis E. Clark: "In your uncompromising hostility to the saloon, in your attempts to promote a white life for two, in all your strivings to give to womankind her sensible and rightful sphere, you have the hearts of Christian Endeavorers everywhere, and while our peculiar mission, and special subordinate relations to our churches forbid us to work in just the same ways and to use the same methods as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the aim and purpose and final triumph of these two armies of the Lord, I believe, will be the same."

Hon. H. W. Blair: "Assure all of my sympathy, respect and admiration for the National W. C. T. U.—one of the most powerful agencies for good in the world, and one of the chief hopes of mankind."

Miss Agnes E. Slack, corresponding secretary W. W. C. T. U.: "The British Women's Temperance Association sends to you and to our white-ribbon comrades at Baltimore greetings, and we earnestly hope your National Convention will give the inspiration and general impetus onwards and upwards in our great cause, which such an assembly of loyal temperance women must give. We remember with great pleasure and gratitude the sisterly way in which our American sisters rallied around us at our National Annual Meetings, and we regret that the big ocean keeps us from joining you in full force at Baltimore."

Anthony Comstock: "Man's greed makes the work of your noble organization a necessity. As Rizpah of old stood in the defense of the dead bodies of Saul's seven sons while they hung upon the gallows, beating back the birds of prey by day and the beasts of prey by night from devouring these dead bodies, so you and the heroic band of devoted women, with a bravery that outshines and outranks the heroes of the battlefield, have stood and are standing in defense not of the dead, but of the living."

Miss Ruth Shaffner: "I believe more than ever in the methods of reform as carried on by our beloved organization. To me the W. C. T. U. is more like 'the ideal church' than any other society I find in the world, ecclesiastic or otherwise."

Col. Bain: "I know your triumph means a nation's sympathy for the beautiful, the good and the true, and that means more than the solution of all money problems."

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, from her sick bed: "I love the work and workers as never before. I think that—to love them all—has been my strongest hold always. I have failed in much—but not in that. The dear women! how their voices and faces haunt my room—how I live in the memories of them."

Rev. Henry Branch: "If you may not be the Deborah to judge Israel, may you be at least as Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, blessed above women in the tent, who put her hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workmen's hammer; and with the hammer she smote Sisera, she smote off his head when she had pierced and stricken through his temples. At her feet he bowed, he fell, he lay down dead. So let the saloon and all thy enemies perish."

Doubtless many as interesting as these given have been omitted through lack of space. The whole nation seemed to breathe out for us only loving kindness, and the year to come ought to be rich in answered prayer.

The first Indian union, of Oregon, sent such unique greetings that we hope to be able to publish them in full in a later issue.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE LINKS.

Last week I sat beside a little woman (Mrs. S. M. I. Henry) whose earth journey is well nigh ended. She is but the shadow of her former self, and the enemy is fast gaining dominion over the flesh, but the spirit is dauntless as ever. Her voice has the same ring as of old, but I thought that her eyes had a deeper, steadier gaze, as if, while standing on the rim of two worlds she saw and heard unutterable things. During our conversation she ran over the past, dwelling with affection on certain periods of her life work, and especially upon the weeks that she was leader of the noonday meetings in Willard Hall. It was there she received the word to lay by, and these weeks of patient waiting for God's chariot are deep sermons to those who know her. She tells me that she is much in prayer over the noonday meetings and maybe this is the secret of their marvelous growth.

The speech of different people moves me strangely. Some persons make me weary, oh, so weary, others rest me. For instance, when Katharine Lente Stevenson speaks, I fall to thinking of rare lilies and fragrance in every place, and there is a dash about Helen M. Barker suggestive of dewdrops chained by sunbeams to the heart of a rose, while Miss Willard sends me adrift over calm seas, dotted with sails, and true hands waving before, but Clara Hoffman stands like a shelter in the time of storm; she is warning, exhortation, command, insight, and sends a desire for battle thrilling along my every nerve, and when at the close of her splendid address Sunday she said,

"Be true, oh, be true," my heart made answer,
"All right, Clara, I'll be true though I die for it."

. . . . . .

I wish there were time and space to mention all the lovely men and women who have helped me these last five months, but there is not.

From this time forth the noonday meetings pass into other, and I trust better, hands, and these are my good-by noontide links.

May the peace of God rest on all who read.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

A Plea for the Forgotten.

TO THE UNION SIGNAL:—I have this week visited the Florence Crittenton Anchorage for Girls, on Wabash avenue, founded some years ago by the Central W. C. T. U.

I found there thirty-five women, some of them pitifully young, and twelve with babes in their arms. It was a sight to make careless hearts thoughtful and steady eyes dim. The poor child who was deceived, betrayed and robbed a few days ago by the man she trusted, and who tried to take her young life, was there. At last she had found those whom she could trust, and who told her they would do all in their power to help her to build her wrecked young life anew on the foundations of industry, purity and honor.

Some of us talked to these forgotten ones as helpfully and kindly as we could, and then they spoke to us with tears, of their gratitude for a home so friendly and mother hearts so sheltering as those of Miss Alice Bond, who has stood by the work for years with a heroism that knew no defeat in the darkest hours; Miss Lyman, the matron, who has the love and good-will of every person connected with the Anchorage; Mrs. E. P. Vale, whom they term "the mother of us all," and other true and noble women who make this home their special work.

It has no endowment, and these devoted souls are obliged to collect each month enough to pay the current expenses of that month, which amounts to not less than three hundred dollars.

I make this plea because I feel sure that there are a sufficient number of good and true men and women to pay this sum for these deceived and defrauded ones, if only the facts are brought to their knowledge.

All money should be sent to Miss Alice Bond, Evanston, Ill., who is a woman of independent means and has given her services for years without money and without price, or to Mrs. M. E. Kline, treasurer of the Mission, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

"He gives twice who gives quickly."

Let us remember our sisters who are "in bonds, as bound with them," let us not forget that our blessed Lord was more considerate toward the Magdalenes than toward any others, because they most needed the comfort of His presence and the strength of His uplifting spirit.

CELEBRATION OF THE EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY OF ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The Metropolitan Opera House in New York city was in full dress on the evening of November 12, and filled with a magnificent audience to do honor to the chief among pioneers for woman's equality, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, on the occasion of her eightieth birthday. Representatives of every line of woman's work were prominent in the boxes and on the stage. Mrs. Stanton, with erect form and strongly intellectual face framed in a wealth of snowy hair, sat in the central chair of a floral throne over which the name "Stanton" stood out in white roses. Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, the president of the National Council of Women of the United States, under whose auspices the celebration was held, sat on Mrs. Stanton's left, and Susan B. Anthony, Mrs. Stanton's co-laborer, sat on her right.

Many of the boxes had been taken by organizations, and these societies had hung out their banners and flags, which with lovely flowers lent color and beauty to the scene, and in this way showed their appreciation of the woman whose steady courage and serene faith had triumphed over prejudice and obloquy, and turned what seemed hopeless effort into triumphant victory. The organizations thus represented were the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the New York State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the New York Medical College and Hospital for Women, the National Christian League, Sorosis, the Emma Willard Association, the Equal Rights Society, the Woman's Republican Club, the Professional Woman's League, the National Society of New England Women, the Woman's Press Club, and others.

The program was a long one, and provided for addresses as follows: Religion, Rev. Anna Shaw; Education, M. Carey Thomas; Red Cross, Clara Barton; Temperance, Mrs. Mary T. Burt; Work for Indians, Mrs. A. S. Quinton; Moral Progress, Rev. Ida Hultin; Suffrage, Susan B. Anthony; Address, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton; Literature, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe; Art, Harriet Hosmer; Medicine, Emily Blackwell, M. D.; Foreign Missions, Mrs. Emeline B. Cheney; Progress of Colored Women, Mrs. Fannie B. Williams; Industries, Harriette A. Keyser; Woman's Progress and Human Progress, Mrs. J. Blake, after which camera tableaux were given. The mayor, Hon. Wm. L. Strong, who was down for a welcome address, was prevented by illness from being present, and his greeting was voiced by his secretary, Mr. Job Hedges. Madame Antoinette Sterling, whom we last heard at that magnificent demonstration of the World's W. C. T. U. in Royal Albert Hall, London, was present, and charmed the audience with her rich contralto voice, heard on this side of the Atlantic for the first time in twenty years. The feature of the evening was the address of Mrs. Stanton, and as she was unable to stand during the time required for its reading, she made a few pleasant remarks, after which the address was read by Miss Helen Potter.

The following is a brief extract of Mrs. Stanton's address which evoked much laughter:

"It is a long time, nearly half a century, since a few persons met in a little Methodist church in Seneca Falls to discuss the status of woman under the laws of New York. That was the first Woman's Rights convention ever held, and there the first demand for suffrage was made. But the vast majority of women ridiculed the idea of political rights for themselves; the press caricatured the convention; the pulpit denounced it, and many who took part withdrew their names and have been seen no more on our platform.

"Within two years conventions were held in half a dozen different states; letters of sympathy came from women all over this country, and from Italy, France and Germany, from those who were taking an active part in the revolutions of 1848. And at that very time, strange to say, the earthquakes began in California, showing that old mother earth sympathized in the general upheaval, in the rebellion of her daughters against the creeds, codes, and customs of old civilizations. At that time, too, the invisibles began to knock and move tables; a new interest was awakened in psychological manifestations.

"In the first place I propose to-night to settle the question of woman's sphere, so that we may never hear it mentioned again. That region has been traveled over so often that there is not a tree or flower or blade of grass to be found on it anywhere, yet excursions of men are from time to time surveying that old worn-out land to find woman's sphere. Ever since Eve left Paradise the trend of human endeavor has been in this direction.

"Those who could pen poetry or prose have written about it; those who could orate in any language under the sun have talked about it; statesmen have declared its limits in laws and constitutions; bishops in scriptures and sermons; editors in journals; actors in tragedy; artists in pictures, and scientists in osseous formations, muscles, nerves, and the size and quantity of feminine brains. [Laughter.]

"I imagine," the address continued, "that at this point some carping women are saying to their neighbors; 'Where do we come in? If man is such a wonderful being, fills all space, and is in every department of industries, where is our sphere?' It is plain to every rational mind that if man is everywhere, doing everything, and woman of necessity must remain her allotted time on this planet, their sphere must be the same. They are, ever must be, indissolubly bound together as mother and father, husband and wife, sister and brother, in childhood, in marriage, in all life's struggles, ever sharing each other's joys and sorrows. With tears of affection and immortal wreaths they perform the last offices of love and friendship for each other, and in the bosom of mother earth, side by side, they rest at last together."

The decoration of the white ribbon boxes was done under the direction of Mrs. William Jennings Demorest who had made for the National box a beautiful white satin banner bearing in gilt letters the name, National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Huge bunches of white chrysanthemums tied with broad, white satin ribbon were placed at the sides of the boxes, and palms and banners and flags completed very beautiful and effective decoration of the white ribbon boxes which were directly in the center of the opera house. In the National box were seated Mr. and Mrs. Woodward Baldwin (the latter Miss Willard's niece) Mrs. Emilie U. Martin and two friends, and Mr. and Mrs. E. Irving Burt. In the state box, Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney, Miss Mary Brown, Miss Helen L. Rollins, Miss Julia Dailey, Mrs. Harriet S. Pritchard and Mrs. Sarah R. Morris. Mrs. Demorest, as chairman of the executive committee, sat in Sorosis box, and on the stage many of our own white-ribboners.

The evening was a splendid success, and clearly demonstrated that woman's progress is human progress the world over. And in this crowning of Mrs. Stanton's eighty years, the obloquy and scorn which met her early efforts were a dim and fading memory seen through the happy tears that filled her eyes at the tributes of love and devotion from the thousands of grateful women present. The cause is marching on.

DEAR SISTERS:—Many of you will remember a call made in THE UNION SIGNAL of October 24, for suggestions as to the method to be employed to reawaken life in the heart of a dead or dying union.

Numerous answers have come in and believing that there may be other unions needing just this help, I will present the suggestions in as brief form as possible, that all of them may be used:

"Make a special effort to secure all your church forces in coöperation for a Grand Temperance Rally;" the sister adds, "on the fourth Sunday in November," but as that day has gone by only the first part of the suggestion is available. The Rally might yet be held in those towns where November 24 was not observed. "Be sure," continues our correspondent, "to make a telling call for members. Hold the meetings of the union from home to home of the members and always plan for each meeting not less than two weeks beforehand."

An enthusiastic Minnesota friend writes: "How many of us read our state and National Minutes? I venture to say that the lagging union in question has not more than one or two copies and those never have been carried to the regular meetings. I would also state that probably not one soul-stirring temperance song has been sung in the union for a year and doubt if two-thirds of the members can repeat the pledge. . . . They need a revival of temperance religion, or, indeed, the ordinary kind would open the sisters' eyes to the dangers that threaten the home. . . . One local president had this plan for the year's work: one member was asked to bring regularly the local news on all lines which come in touch with our white-ribbon work, another the state gleanings, and still another the National; some one followed the Great Petition, while the Temple Wheel had its special 'reporter'; another member took notes on and reported the movements of the Prohibition party. . . . It is good sometimes to eat and drink together, if only a cup of tea and a wafer, each one present being prepared to present a temperance thought. . . . Would not a budget of three months' clippings from our dailies on the results of the drink-evil and allied topics, furnish material for a public meeting under some taking name, which would be an eye-opener and heart-awakener to those who should be gathered together to hear them? . . . A juvenile entertainment always takes and juveniles are always on hand."

South Dakota: "The discouraging condition of that union resembles the state into which ours once lapsed, and as they are now well attended I thought some use might be made of our experience. An interesting program is prepared for each meeting, and announced ahead of time. Usually two members each prepare a paper, and these are followed by open discussions. Music is introduced between the papers. Our programs are printed in the local papers, and this often brings us new visitors, and eventually, members. The meetings are held regularly, and begin and end promptly. Here is a sample program. Subject, Narcotics. 1. Devotional Exercises; 2. Business; 3. Items of interest from members; 4. A Plea for the White Ribbon; 5. Objections to the use of Soothing Syrup; 6. Discussion; 7. Song; 8. Heathendom's Most Popular Gift to Christianity; 9. Discussion; 10. Law Against Selling to Minors read and remarks as to its enforcement; 11. Close by repeating pledge in concert."

In Mississippi one of the unions found difficulty in securing a quorum at its meetings. This is what was done: "We appointed a committee of one to arrange for a Gospel meeting to be held ten days later. A good program was rendered and one of the pastors of the vicinity gave an address, urging the women to keep up the good work. Our president gave from her heart a stirring appeal and some who had been staying away returned to us. We are now planning an L. T. L. rally. I would advise this discouraged union to hold a Gospel meeting once a month, take a collection and with the money subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL for the superintendents and others. When new superintendents are appointed the president should show them where and how to take hold. Vague instruction is often at the bottom of inefficient work."

"I would advise the faithful few to monopolize the offices," writes yet another, "advertise their work through the press, be on the alert to notice and praise every little effort made by the 'lukewarms,' take up a few departments at first and work those departments for all they are worth. Every society needs, and generally has, at least one member with a faculty for keeping posted on all phases of the work, and who carries the burden of the cause on her heart day and night. That person, no matter what her other shortcomings are, ought to be the president. Rotation in office sometimes works well. Each member ought to be quick to see and feel if she is standing as a stumbling block in the way of the union's prosperity; but if she is blind, use tact; offer a by-law for adoption providing that no woman shall hold the same office two years in succession. The difficulties of the union in question are so familiar to us that I feel as though I could write twice as much on the subject, but will content myself with the one suggestion, Don't be too modest."

Next week we will continue this "testimony meeting."

Yours in our best endeavors,

Mother Experience.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? . . . Faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone.—James 2: 14, 17.

Let not the hearts of the Temple Prayer Band be discouraged that they see no large sums recorded in this column. During the last week or two sickness in my family has prevented active work on my part. I fully believe the prayers of this faithful band are being answered, but in a different way from what any of us expected. God's leadings seem to point to a universal giving on our own part before we need expect outsiders to give. He wants us all to learn the lesson that "Faith without works is dead." Think how inspiring it would be if we would all take hold and help to pay for our own House Beautiful. We can never feel that it is ours until we own some little part in it by right of paying towards it. We know in our ranks there are those that can pay their thousands, and there are at least ten thousand that can pay one hundred dollars. Others fifty, twenty-five, ten and five dollars. Hearts are already being touched in this direction. And it is borne in upon me very strongly that until white-ribboners "bring all the tithes into the storehouse" God will not pour out His blessing upon us in abundance.

The Praying Band are proving their faith by their works. There is not a single member but has either given or is at work for the Temple. One of them has pledged five hundred dollars, several have given one hundred dollars each. Among the latter is Mrs. Gardner, of Sanderstown, R. I. She lives on a farm and works hard early and late. When I went to see her two or three weeks ago, she slipped a hundred dollars into my hand, saying, "This is the Lord's money. I always put away one-tenth for His work. This I have laid aside for the Temple." As I looked at her little cottage, sorely needing paint, I said to myself, this is self-denial indeed. How few of us under the circumstances but would have felt justified in using the money for putting our house in order. Pray on, dear faithful ones, a movement is on foot which will appear in next week's UNION SIGNAL, that is of the greatest significance, and which I feel is God's way of answering your prayers.

The ten thousand women in our ranks who can pay $100 are beginning to answer to the roll call. Mrs. Harriet J. Roworth, Providence, R. I., sends $100. Mrs. Isabella Robins, Long Branch City, N. J., sends $100. The smaller sums are also coming. Mrs. Schreiner, the secretary of the Westby, Wis., union, writes Mrs. Thorsgard, a farmer's wife, living four miles from Westby, sends $10, which she earned herself on purpose for the Temple. She belongs to our union, and many a time walks both ways to attend our meetings. Ten dollars comes from one of God's hidden ones from Boston, Mass., "with a prayer and a wish that our House Beautiful may soon be free from debt. The Rev. L. Newcomb, Pomona, Kan., writes: "Please find enclosed $5 for your service in paying off the Temple debt. I wish I could do more, but do what I can cheerfully." If all who are interested in the Temple would give as much as this good brother the debt would be soon wiped out. One gift for the Temple has been received, which seems to me is priceless. The letter which accompanied it is most pathetic. She commences her letter by saying, "The brave struggle you are making for our beautiful Temple ought to stir every white-ribboner to the depths of both heart and pocketbook. I am city missionary." Then she goes on to tell of the pittance she has to support a large family upon, as she is a widow.

The only thing of value she has is a pearl ring, which belonged to a darling daughter who passed through the gates of pearl a year ago. She sends this precious memento to be sold for the Temple. It is valued at $20, and is almost new.

Old and young alike can fill Wheels. A letter lies before me from Mr. John I. Polen, Washington, D. C. This dear old gentleman has been a confirmed invalid for two years. He has just sent a filled Wheel, besides he has filled in the past two mite-boxes. And yet he makes excuses for doing so little for the Temple on account of poor health. "May his kind increase."

All orders for Temple Wheels, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel or mite-box. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr. G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

THANKSGIVING.

BY AMELIA E. BARR.

"Have you cut the wheat in the blowing fields
The barley, the oats and the rye?
The golden corn and the pearly rice?
For the winter days are nigh."
"We have reaped them all from shore to shore,
And the grain is safe on the threshing floor."

"Have you gathered the berries from the vines,
And the fruit from the orchard trees?
The dew and the scent from the rose and thyme
In the hive of the honey-bees?"
"The peach and the plum and the apple are ours.
And the honeycomb from the scented flowers."

"The wealth of the snowy cotton field
And the gift of the sugar cane,
The savory herb and the nourishing root,
There has nothing been given in vain.
We have gathered the harvest from shore to shore,
And the measure is full and running o'er."

Then lift up the head with a song!
And lift up the hands with a gift!
To the ancient Giver of all
The spirit in gratitude lift!
For the joy and the promise of spring,
For the hay and the clover sweet,
The barley, the rye and the oats,
The rice and the corn and the wheat,
The cotton and sugar and fruit,
The flowers and the fine honeycomb,
The country, so fair and so free,
The blessing and glory of home.
"Thanksgiving! thanksgiving! thanksgiving!"
Joyfully, gratefully call
To God, the "Preserver of men,"
The bountiful Father of all.

In Two Chapters.

BY LILLIAN L. TROTT.

CHAPTER I.

"Mother, what is Sofe to us?"

Clarence rushed in upon her, hurling the question at her with the violence of a demand.

"Steady, my boy! Is the matter pressing?"

"Mother, I wish you wouldn't tease. It riles me," his aggrieved expression carrying conviction with it. "Who is she, and what is she, and why should the boys taunt me with Sofe?"

In her perplexity Mrs. Morai appealed to her husband. "The time has come when he must know; you tell him, Franc, I can't."

Clarence went straight to his father and looked into his eyes, awaiting the explanation he was sure to receive. The Morais had taught their children to bring their doubts and woes to them, and the result was an unswerving trust in parental love and judgment. This time Francis Morai paused to frame his answer in words fitting for childish ears. They must convey the true facts without shaking that self-respect so guardedly cherished in this one son. Clarence did not urge him. He would get his rights in his father's own time. His form of speech thought out, the head of the household spoke.

"You know what poison is?"

"Yes."

"And you know what a person giving another poison is called?"

"Yes, sir."

"Even though the person drinking it knows it and pays for it in money? And you know what alcohol is?"

"Poison."

"And you know, Clare, that the evil-doings of no one but yourself are a disgrace to you. If I should sell men alcohol you would have no reason to feel ashamed of what you could not help."

"I should feel bad!" Clarence was snuggled closely, now, his petulance all gone.

"You know how my grandfather came here with his brother from France. The brother, my great-uncle, married Sofe. In those days rum-selling was not the crime it is now. Her father kept a tavern and she was barmaid. At his death the inn became hers. After the liquor laws were made her husband realized that what the law made a crime must be wicked and tried to hinder her selling by stealth. He couldn't, and they say he died of a broken heart. She has been in prison several times, but she will find some one to poison as long as she lives, and that cannot be long now; she is old."

"H'm," said Clare, "I wonder 'f the boys think they'll make me think I'm worse'n them 'cause my great, great uncle married a black sheep? I dare say they've got lots 'f cranky relations way back 'mong the old dead fellers 't they think folks have forgot all 'bout. Anyway, I sha'n't own her, 'n' I'd 've thought more of her husband if he hadn't after she cut up so," and he whistled off to his play, apparently dismissing Sofe thus summarily. The faces of his parents cleared. Long had they dreaded the effect of this one dark chapter in the family history. Fortunately a habit of weighing the right and wrong of things had been instilled into his mind till it had become second nature and did much to counterbalance his over sensitive disposition. He regarded this delicate subject as they had hoped, but had hardly dared expect, and they were glad.

He did not mention the woman again. On passing the house with either father or mother they would notice a more erect carriage in their son, a flashing eye and a more direct gaze straight on past the shanty where her night-capped head might be seen at the window if he had deigned to look. He made no other sign. Once, when she was sick nigh unto death Mrs. Morai sent a girl to nurse her, and asked Clarence to take her a basket of delicacies. He was an obedient boy, and his mother little knew that torture could not drive him into that woman's presence. She saw him take the basket and start up the road. Then she went about her work and forgot him until he returned.

"Did the nurse come to the door?" she asked, thinking that he had inquired after the woman's health, though she had not reminded him to do so.

"I didn't go to the door!" he exclaimed, in a tone full of horror.

"What did you do?" surprised.

"I hired a boy," loftily.

"What boy, pray, and what with?"

"I met David Streeter coming along, and I gave him my new whistle for going in with it."

"Your new whistle! And you were so long teasing for it! Well, Clarence, what will you do next?"

But Mr. Morai was highly amused. "She is past harming you by her baleful influence, now, Clare," he said, banteringly; "besides, it was worse to put another boy in the way of temptation than to go yourself,—you, who realize the danger."

"You know how it was," he sobbed, provoked to tears, as he usually was by his father's ridicule; "I know she is down and can't get up, but I didn't want to look at her, and didn't want to touch a thing 't ever belonged to her."

"There, there, I understand. We never sent you there before, and will not again."

Sofe did get up, in time, but Clarence never betrayed by word or sign that he was aware of her existence, and the father and mother did not speak of it to him, firm in their belief that so long as his heart was right, this strange child of theirs could not go far wrong.

. . . . . .

"So we're to have a boy! I'm glad 'nough!"

"You won't have him to play with much; he'll have to work."

"Well," with that old-man sigh of his, "it'll be something to have him round. 'Twon't hinder his work to look at him, will it?"

When Mr. Morai came in again he was followed by a boy some two or three years older than Clarence though scarcely taller. He paused shyly in the shadow of the kitchen door, hardly venturing to lift his eyes to the lighted room beyond. Clarence came out to him, finding a nondescript personage too bashful to talk.

"He ain't much for looks," he told them in the sitting-room, "but there's a little of everything in his eyes."

It was not many days, however, before the human iceberg thawed under the persistent warmth of Clare's social nature. Then came to him with a pang the knowledge that a boy of his height could be older and stronger and wiser in the ways of the world than he.

"I don't see," he reflected, "how a fellow 't has alwus lived 'mong savages 'n' seen so many horrid tricks can be so—civilized!" with his invariable exclamation point. Still, away down in his inner consciousness he felt that Sewd, while patronizing his youth and inexperience, reverenced the rectitude of his character.

"Why is it, Sewd," he asked once, "that you ain't homely? Your face is homely—anyway your nose and mouth and skin are homely and you've the strangest lookin' hair I ever saw. And you never have any decently good clothes. And you have a way of sliding round out of folks' way as if you are afraid to look up, that don't make you any handsomer. But I can't for the life of me make the whole of you look homely. There's something about you that is better looking than other boys, 'n' what is it? I can't find out. I've taken you bit by bit and put you beside other folks 'n' every part 'f you is homelier; but you ain't."

Sewd laughed amusedly and not ill pleased. He was growing attached to the child and his quaint sayings entertained him, even when aimed at himself.

One evening they were in the yard wrestling. The older people never interfered now, for they had perfect confidence in Sewd and it was well for Clarence to play with one of his liking. He was careful not to press the slighter boy beyond his strength. Suddenly there came a whistle, long and low and thrilling.

"Is it Lorn?" whispered Clare, with a shudder. Sewd had told him of his acquaintance, later his intimacy with a young man of doubtful repute. He had condemned the practices of this Lorn while acknowledging his fascination.

"Lorn," answered Sewd, as again the signal came, this time peremptorily, and he sprang up to answer it.

"You will not go," Clare said, his face blanching white, as Sewd caught a glimpse of it in the moonlight.

"He'll think I'm scaley t' shake him off—sworn friends."

"He'll think you're scalier if you go with him," retorted the child, "when you know better."

Sewd wavered that moment, but the next a daring face peered above the palings and his allegiance was shaken.

"Go on without me," he said.

"It's b'tween th' little chap 'n' me?" asked the stranger.

"Yes."

The face disappeared, and the boys were left staring into each other's eyes, Clarence realizing, though less fully than Sewd, what that moment had done for his friend.

"He ain't got the hold he thought he had on me." Sewd was in a confidential mood to-night, and who does not find relief in reciting past exploits, whether we be ashamed or proud of them, to younger, admiring, sympathetic ears? "I b'lieve I'd 've gone—obeyed the summons, like—if I hadn't seen his face. The glitter in his eye kind 'f stumped me t' contradict him by doin's I'm a min' to. He needn't be so sure 'f me yet awhile."

They were down on the grass again now and Clare scarcely breathed lest he should lose a syllable of the confidence which all, old and young, were wont to repose in him.

"You see I've been used t' goin' 'th Lorn ever since I kin remember," Sewd went on, "all th' fellers like Lorn. Nobuddy kin help it. You see why, jist t' look at him t'night. They's a charm in his eye. 'N' he didn't slur 's some toughs would, did y' mind? I guess it's th' recklessness 'f him 't I like best," his voice melting tenderly when he recounted the virtues of his former comrade, "but all th' boys go with him where I come from; you know where that is?"

"Yes," answered Clarence, considerately letting the reference to his home environment pass without comment.

"'N' if I was t' have company 't all I'd have t' take some such. 'N' Lorn's th' best 'f th' lot, though he kin git a feller t' drink when nobuddy, not even th' old sots, kin."

A less artless child would have known that Sewd could not have breathed that polluted atmosphere untainted. But his faith in his hero was unbounded, and Sewd, keen to perceive and quick to appreciate, was grateful as to no other being. The trust of friends appeals to all that is best in human nature, and Sewd felt that Clarence saw in him the Sewd he might have been.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS.

BY A. P. GRAVES, D. D.

What would have been the state of things to-day with the enormous march of intemperance, crime and ruin, had it not been for the Crusade of twenty-one years ago and the woman's work that has followed? The checking of the evil has indeed been visible on every hand and in every part of the world. Those engaged in the liquor business watch the ever-vigilant work of the W. C. T. U. with an eagle eye. They feel its power. They stand in awe of its dread influence, and never more so than now. The conventions of this year have been felt by the nations of the earth.

After Dr. Judson had spent twenty years in heathen lands at the very beginning of the missionary enterprise he was asked, "What is the prospect of success?" His reply was, "It is as wide as the promises of God." May we not believe this is equally true of the temperance movement that lies so near the hearts of many of our noble Christian women? It is true. The great conflict is upon us, but as sure as it has been revealed that righteousness shall reign and that when "the enemy comes in like a flood the spirit of the Lord shall raise up a standard against him," victory will come.

Faith, prayer and work will win. Nothing else can conquer. We can expect little from the red tape policy of corrupted politics. Our weapons are not carnal, but spiritual to the pulling down of strongholds.

BEING THANKFUL.

"What a beautiful snow-storm," thought Milly, as she stood looking wistfully out of the window. She did so wish she was out. If she, too, were only a little street-sweeper. It was so hard to be kept carefully within doors—so hard. She was silent for full ten minutes—busy with her thoughts. At last, a happy one struck her, and she turned quickly to her mother, a pretty-faced young woman, who was deeply interested in retrimming a last year's bonnet, and who at this moment exclaimed, triumphantly, "Really, it will be as good as new."

"Mother," interrupted Milly.

"Well?"

"Then I cannot skate?"

"No," deeply engrossed in the bonnet.

"Nor slide down hill?"

"No, child, not in this snow-storm."

"But I can put on my cloak, and new fur tippet, and gloves, and take an umbrella, and fill a basket with goodies for poor Miss Fanshaw. Can't I? For she is so poverty poor, you know."

Milly had one thought for Miss Fanshaw and two for herself. For, in reality, she thought herself hardly used to be kept indoors; while she deemed it rare fun to be "poverty poor," like Miss Fanshaw in her little playhouse room.

Her mother smiled wisely, and gave her permission to go. So Milly, like the little woman that she was, equipped herself for the walk. She then went into the storeroom, and put into a willow basket a loaf of bread, a jar of sweetmeats, and four red apples. After which preparation she started forth with as happy a face as one could meet in a day's walk; and the face was no happier than the little warm heart beating beneath the warm cloak. No wonder the snow was not cold to her.

All too quickly, Milly was at Miss Fanshaw's door. In answer to Milly's "rat-tat-tap" at the door, it creaked and wriggled and groaned a little, and then swung wide open; and there stood Miss Fanshaw, a little shriveled figure, the shoulders pinned tightly up in an antiquated baby blanket, embroidered all around in "herring bone" and various other marvelous stitches. From under the shawl peeped two arms, clothed in the neatest "leg-o'-mutton" sleeves. On one finger was a—ring—no, something just as dear to her, and it betokened a life-long engagement, too! It was an old brass thimble, worn full of holes, and as bright as gold itself.

But I must not forget her face. A white face, with white hair, white eyebrows and eyelashes, and two deep blue, bright, twinkling eyes, which seemed to say, "Ah, me, what a dear, delightful, merry, busy world it is; and I've a young heart for it yet, if the wrinkles are in my face!"

"Bless the child!" she cried, in her short, crisp way. "Did she come down in the snow?" And she drew Milly in and took the long broom and swept her from head to foot. "Now, my dear, I've swept the way to your mouth, I must have a kiss!"

So, giving her one emphatic embrace, she whirled along the hall of the tenement house into the least atom of a room—not half as big as your playroom—and perched her up in an old, rickety armchair.

If any one presumed to suggest that Miss Fanshaw might be more comfortable in a larger room, she laughed within herself, exclaiming, "No, no, my dearies; you see, I have only to sit in the middle of my room to reach everything. There's my Bible, and there's my bread jar, and there's my work basket, and there's my cutting board, and there's the stove, with the teapot on it—so handy!" And her hand pointed around the room as if it were a hand on a clock pointing to the hours. "Besides, as for the wood, why, I'm warm as toast with burning two sticks and a few kindlers a day. Then I can tidy up the room bright as a basket o' chips in less than a wink o' time."

Milly thought this housekeeping a wonderful affair, and Miss Fanshaw a sort of divinity.

A happy thought struck Milly as she sat perched in the armchair and Miss Fanshaw flitted like a humming-bird about her.

"Miss Fanshaw!"

"Well, dear?"

"Let's play tea."

"Play tea? Of course you shall."

And she buzzed over a little cupboard, and brought ou a tiny shining teakettle, and put it on the tiny stove, over the tiny blaze. It began to sing and sing. She then whirled a little round table (resting on a leg with three carved claws) into the center of the room. Over this she spread a strip of old, white, homemade linen. Upon this she placed one plate with a dot of butter, another plate with a dot of cheese, and another with a dot of "sass." Then she brought out a crusty piece of bread, two marvelous little china cups and two ancient plates figured with red.

Then came Milly's turn. She climbed down from her perch, drew the basket from under her cloak, which she had declined removing, put the loaf on the table, then the jar, and then ranged the four red apples beside them.

"Bless the child! bless the child!" cried little Miss Fanshaw, lifting her two hands and rolling up her two bright eyes.

Then she chattered and hummed like the teakettle as she took Milly's wrappings and hung them on a peg and filled up her teapot; and they sat down to the table.

There was a deep silence in the room—even the kettle forgot to sing; all silent but the old ticking clock.

So, in silence, Miss Fanshaw's laughing eyes closed, and her fingers, pricked with scores of needles, were now crossed devoutly on her breast, and her lips moved with the words:

"For our blessings, Lord, make us truly thankful. Amen."

"Milly's eyes grew rounder and larger than ever. When Miss Fanshaw lifted her sweet, bleached face, it was as light as if in some way the Lord himself looked out of it.

"Miss Fanshaw!"

"What, dearie? Will you have a sip of tea?"

"Do you always say it?"

"Why, to be sure I do (have a lump o' sugar in) only I usually say, I and me. Now, you know, it's we and us."

"Why do you say it? Our folks don't."

"You see, Milly (have a bit of butter? there's more on the shelf), you see I have so much to be thankful for."

"What for, Miss Fanshaw?" Milly had forgotten to eat.

"What for? Why, if it ain't one thing, it is another. If it isn't the broken candles the grocer gives, it's the liver from the Grimes' in killing time; and if it isn't the liver, it's the shirts to make for the Pecksniffs; and if it isn't the shirts, it's the sitting in Miss Markham's pew; and if it isn't the pew, it's the chips from the new barn a-building; and if it isn't the chips (have a bit of cheese?) why, the beautiful snow comes down for me to look at; and when I'm thinking of the poor woman round the corner, who should come in but little Milly, as if she snowed out of the clouds. So now I shall have a feast to take to the poor, hungering woman I was a thinking of. Don't you think I ought to think of the Giver, Milly?"

Milly's face was full of wonder and awe.

"I say, Miss Fanshaw, don't you ever say me any more. You just play I'm here, and you say (lifting her small hands): 'Lord, make us truly thankful.'"

A tear came in Miss Fanshaw's eye.

"Yes, dearie, it shall be us after this. Anyways, all that love the Lord are 'us.' It's just like the 'ring-a-round-a-rosy' in the school play. We all have a hold of hands, and are 'us'—only the ring goes all around the big world."

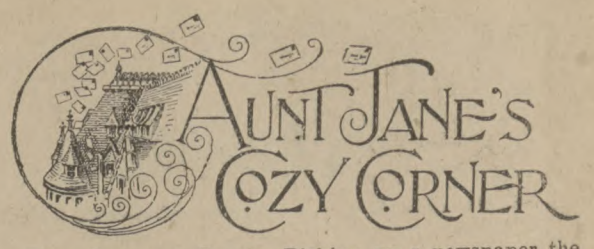
472. Halloween.



Dear Boys and Girls:—Picking up a newspaper the other day I read a very interesting letter. It was a personal letter to me, and it was a personal letter to each one of you as well, though it wasn't sent to you through the mail! I wonder how many bright eyes saw it, and I wonder how many bright Cozy Cornerers can guess what I mean?

It was a nice letter and began by telling about God's great goodness to the American people. Then it went on to tell how we ought to thank Him. But it didn't stop there for it told just when and where we should give thanks. "Thursday, the 28th day of the present month of November" the letter said, ("Oh, ho," you cry, "why, that's Thanksgiving day!") "let us forego our usual occupations and in our accustomed places of worship join in rendering thanks to the Giver of every good and perfect gift."

The letter was not very long and yet there was a great deal in it. The writer finished by saying: "And, with our thanksgiving, let us humbly beseech the Lord to so incline the hearts of our people unto Him that He will not leave us nor forsake us as a nation, but will continue to use His mercy and protecting care, guiding us in the path of national prosperity and happiness, enduing us with rectitude and virtue, and keeping alive within us a patriotic love for the free institutions which have been given to us as our national heritage. And let us also on the day of our thanksgiving, especially remember the poor and needy, and by deeds of charity let us show the sincerity of our gratitude."

Now who can tell me the writer's name? Close your eyes and think. Why, the President of the United States, of course!

And, dear Cozy Cornerers, won't you study out these words and do what, not only the head of our nation, but the allwise Creator of the Universe has asked you to do on Thanksgiving Day? Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

NEPHEWS AND NIECES.

A LEAP YEAR COZY CORNERER.

Mamma called my attention to the letters in the Cozy Corner so I had a fancy to write a letter too. I have joined the L. T. L. and attend it at every meeting. I had a birthday three years ago, in Michigan, on the twenty-ninth of February and will have one next year, then I will not have one till I am sixteen. See if any of the Cozy Cornerers can figure that out.

GROWING FOR TEMPERANCE.

I would like to step into the Cozy Corner and I am trying to lead a temperance life. I hope I will be a temperance woman all my life. I am only nine years old now and will be ten the twenty-third of December. I am a member of the church and try to go to church every Sunday. My grandma takes The Union Signal and I like to read the Cozy Corner every week. My mamma and grandma belong to the W. C. T. U.

Mamma takes The Union Signal, and I take The Little Worker and Child Garden. I cut out the children's page for my scrapbook. We have three churches and no saloons in our town. We have a missionary society but no L. T. L. or W. C. T. U. I am ten years old. Mother, father and I are temperance. I would like to be one of your little nieces. Yours to help down the saloon,

THE LITTLE COLD WATER GIRL.

I like to read the children's page and crack the Soft Shelled Nuts. I am ten years old and belong to the L. T. L. I collected $1.10 for the Willard Fountain and went to the World's Fair. I was disappointed to find the little girl was not furnishing water for the company. I want to call myself your niece. Lulie Rae Bryant.

HAS ENJOYED THE COZY CORNER.

I would like to become a member of the Cozy Corner. I used to be a member of the L. T. L., but there is no Legion in this place. I have enjoyed the Cozy Corner very much ever since you started it, but since I saw Aunt Jane's picture in the White Ribbon Portfolio, I have enjoyed it much more than formerly. We have a ten minutes' temperance talk at Sunday-school each month. Our school is the largest in the city and we hope it will do much good. Anna Eves.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

What are the needs of the work in the line of our publications? is the query often propounded to casual W. C. T. U. visitors at our office. The answers are as varied as the individual, but unhesitatingly is the verdict given, "A wide-awake worker along any line cannot exist without THE UNION SIGNAL."

It is not a question of preference to be determined by the actual enjoyment received from the perusal of the paper, as compared with the favorite religious weekly, the popular fashion magazine, or the one which takes precedence in point of mere literary merit, but it is as the official organ of the National W. C. T. U. that THE UNION SIGNAL claims first place with all white-ribboners. It is not secondary, it is true, to any paper in the land in everything which goes to make up a first-class newspaper but it is distinctively and in its entirety devoted to the interests of every line of reform in which the great organization is engaged.

Although it carries the finest and purest class of advertising to be found in the journalistic field, yet it was not started to be an advertising sheet, and while its policy conserves the best interests of its advertising patrons, it is a recognized fact, that first and foremost THE UNION SIGNAL is true to its principles and nothing can knowingly creep into its columns adverse to the highest good and the avowed purposes of its grand constituency.

Not a week passes that questionable advertisements are not rejected, and its columns are as jealously guarded in that important part of the paper as in any other.

This scrutiny, this determination to keep its pages even in the slightest minutiæ, consecrated to its work of uplifting mankind is ground for a strong appeal for support in its subscription department.

We beg you to read with care the letter on the title page of the Thanksgiving number and in response to send some new names as a Christmas gift to your friends and to us. We do not believe you can say nay to the earnest request of our president, and we ask as an aid to watching its results, that you will state with each new name forwarded, that it is in response to Miss Willard's appeal. It is difficult for us to discriminate in a list so large as that of THE UNION SIGNAL, and each year friends are embarrassed by an appeal for renewal which should go not to them but to those by whose generosity the paper is sent to them. In many instances those who receive THE UNION SIGNAL do not know to whom they are indebted for the favor and it necessitates an explanation which is often annoying to them and to us.

This will be obviated if you kindly send to us explicit directions with new names and will notify us to remove from the list those to whom you do not wish to send the paper gratuitously. May we suggest also that in placing these subscriptions you bear in mind the date of the Convention Number, November 7, 1895, and order the paper from that date, thus giving to your friends an insight into the work of the National in its many departments, which can be obtained in no other way.

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

"IN EVERYTHING GIVE THANKS."

Our national Thanksgiving had its origin among the Pilgrim Fathers of Plymouth Colony in 1621, the first year after their arrival from Holland. To the well-fed, worldly thanksgiver of to-day, whose table is loaded with luxuries, and who never thinks of peril to life or property, those Plymouth colonists must seem to have had very little to be thankful for. They were all poor; lived in miserable cabins, on a bleak and sterile sea-coast, surrounded by savages and wild beasts. They had barely enough for present wants, and were in daily peril of life. But to them it was reason for devout thanksgiving that they had not starved, that the Indians had not murdered them, that a few of their original number had survived disease and hardship, that game had been plenty, and that they had harvested a small crop of corn. They had endured indescribable sufferings; the future was full of uncertainties and dangers; yet they celebrated their condition by instituting a day of public thanksgiving!

There are some good lessons for us in this example of our pious ancestors. If they had reason to give thanks, how much more have we? Our homes are palaces compared with theirs. Our barns are bursting with gathered harvests. We have no outside foes, and have peace in all our borders. No desolating pestilence has visited our land during the year. Plenty, peace, health,—surely these are sufficient reasons why all the people of this heaven-favored land should unite in thanksgiving to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, and take up the Psalmist's hymn of praise: "Unto thee, O Lord, do we give thanks? Thou visitest the earth and waterest it. Thou blessest the springing thereof. Thou crownest the year with thy goodness. The pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys are covered with corn."

The fact that our New England forefathers, in their unpropitious circumstances, had the disposition to keep the feast of harvest, proves that in the hardest lot the truly devout and grateful heart does not lack for the impulse and occasions of sincere thanksgiving. The fountain of gratitude does not depend for its flow upon the smiles of fortune, but upon the ever springing well of divine grace and love in the soul. The command, "In everything give thanks," implies that occasions for thanksgiving are never wanting. God's mercies are innumerable. "If we would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered." They are constant, rich every evening and new every morning. The man who cannot find much to be thankful for needs to pray with George Herbert:

> "Thou hast given much to me;
> Give me one thing more—a grateful heart,
> Not thankful when it pleaseth me,
> As if thy blessings had spare days,
> But such a heart, whose pulse may be thy praise."

The excuses men make for not giving thanks to God for His goodness do not reflect credit upon human nature. Some have a habit of contrasting their circumstances with those who seem more highly favored in point of health or wealth or position and say: "They have reason to be thankful. If I were as well off as they, I, too, would be grateful." But the fact that others have more than we is no reason why we should refuse to thank God for what we have. Others, who have abundance, allow their greed for greater gains to quench the spirit of gratitude. But some have had real hardships, business reverses, sickness, bereavement or other troubles, and in their affliction and sorrow for what they have lost, forget the rich blessings that remain to them. We are too apt to allow our losses and bereavements to blind our minds to the infinite goodness of God. The innumerable benefits He is continually bestowing upon us are lost sight of in the occasional misfortunes and sufferings that we may have experienced.

Now, instead of dwelling upon our losses and hardships, we ought to think of the blessings we still have. We should count up our mercies, and think especially of the riches of God's grace and love, which are sufficient to console us for every earthly loss. Look on the bright side; cultivate the spirit of thankfulness, then shall we be able to "rejoice evermore," and "in everything give thanks." "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord." "Praise is comely, and praise is pleasant." "O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever." We should be thankful even in adversity. Many of God's richest blessings come to us in disguise. Losses of health, wealth or friends are not unmitigated evils, if they lead us to seek the consolations of religion. Every misfortune that comes to the Christian has its compensations, for "all things shall work together for good to them that love God."

And so it is our privilege and duty to be always thankful. The religion of gratitude is the noblest. It is the right and manly thing to do to recognize the hand that feeds us. We give thanks unto God for what He is to us. He is our God, our Father, our Preserver and constant Benefactor, whose care for us is infinitely greater than that of earthly parents for their children. More than that, He is our Saviour. Shall we not praise Him for what He has done for us, and unite with the minstrel king in singing: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases, who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies; who satisfieth thy mouth with good things, so that thy youth is renewed like the eagles"?

WE MUST EDUCATE OR PERISH.

The study of mankind from an anthropological standpoint is interesting, but after man has entered into civilization and been set in nations he becomes of far more importance, because higher things than those of archeology, philology or even ethnology enter into his record. "The state of being vested with the rights and privileges of a citizen" is his, only when he has entered upon what is termed "history proper." But even then the varieties and vicissitudes of citizenship have been great, and never yet even in the freest governments has the exact line of adjustment been found between the rights of the governed and the governing; and never yet has good in government ceased to be attended by evil. That this is true need not deter from constant striving toward the ideal. And now that Christianity has at least nominally conquered the world, and the Golden Rule is an universal precept, how much more should the striving for the greatest good to every one be intensified?

Our Republic is one which has larger individual liberty in it, possibly, than any other ever had. Yet thoughtful people know that unless certain conditions are secured and maintained, this very liberty enhances the danger. "We must educate, we must educate or we perish" is truer of our beloved government than of any other, not even excepting that of the Athenians.

They who have studied history philosophically are already prepared to have an opinion in matters pertaining to government and citizenship. They have read the moral and hidden facts, as well as the material ones of battles and sieges, and know that the first, though most difficult to grasp, are the ones upon which hang the destinies of men and of nations.

They know that a pure democracy cannot exist save in restricted territory and with such leisure on the part of citizens as will allow them to run together to vote on every question, and hence pure democracy cannot enter into modern politics. They know that in the most perfect democracy the world ever saw, ten slaves to every free man, with attendant evils, sent democracy to the wall, blotted out the Achæan and the Ætolian Federal Leagues which had well-nigh accomplished so much for humanity and allowed oligarchy to take freedom by the throat, rather than that this or that battle was lost, or that Sparta was jealous. They know why the Roman Republic went down and all Europe lapsed into a state of servility, analogous to that of Asia under its despotic dynasties. They know that the great Roman Empire contributed no lasting element to modern civilization save the remembrance of imperial majesty and centralized, absolute power, and that it was left for the fierce barbarian Goth, Vandal, Frank and what not, sweeping down from the northern plains of Asia, to reintroduce into the world the idea of personal independence, alloyed to be sure with brutal and fierce selfishness, but, nevertheless, having in it a noble and moral character which has produced lasting and beneficent results. Such students are prepared to trace the growth of liberty through the revolt of serfs against the tyranny of Feudal Lords, and freemen against kings to whom they had unwisely entrusted their liberties without sufficient guard and limitation.

To such, the Dark Ages is not simply a confused jumble of theocratic, monarchic, aristocratic and democratic principles warring, and no one triumphing to the exclusion of the other, but it is the germinating period of modern Europe, the very cradle of a civilization which was to be neither narrowly circumscribed, exclusive, nor stationary, and in the development of which was to be displayed the liberty of the citizen in contrast with ancient political liberty.

To such readers the Reformation was not simply a revolt against error in the church, but it was a demonstration in favor of the freedom of the human intellect which would not be satisfied with anything less, though the human mind was scarce conscious of what it demanded. To such readers Napoleon was not simply a great military genius, "grand, gloomy and peculiar," but rather a despot who accommodated himself to the modern spirit sufficiently to carry his points under cover of "the voice of the people," "the voice of God," because he could not carry them in any other way. Such readers know that modern kings blinded the people with the insignia of "The Divine right of kings," till mighty revolutions swung the pendulum into the extreme of bloody revolutions and the guillotine. Such students are prepared to understand and appreciate the reasons for the foundation of our Republic, and what its principles are. They know that "the essence of government by no means resides in compulsion, in the exercise of brute force," but that "it consists more especially of a system of means and powers, conceived for the purpose of discovering upon all occasions what is best to be done; for the purpose of discovering the truth which by right ought to govern society, for the purpose of persuading all men to acknowledge this truth, to adopt and respect it willingly and freely"; or, in other words, that government is a system of ways and means by which truth is discovered and introduced to the public mind. They know that in a government like ours the voice of the people should first be right, should express the truth; and, secondarily, that those to whom authority is delegated should speak the truth in the broadest sense, and so they are prepared to appreciate the force of Henry Ward Beecher's words: "We must educate, we must educate, or we perish."

If mothers exercised such influence in Spartan times, is it not much more obligatory upon the women of this free government, that they enter into the history and philosophy of government, for woman is already a power behind the throne, and nobody knows how soon she may be on it, for as soon as she wields the ballot she wields the scepter.

The history of the first federal leagues the world ever saw and to which we really owe so much, as set forth in Grote's great history of Greece; the "History of Federal Governments," by Freeman; the "History of Civilization," by Guizot; Cooley's and other works on "Constitutional Law"; the various histories of political parties; "The Government of the People of the United States"; De Tocqueville's "Democracy in America," and hosts of other works, down to the primers on civil government and the stories of the rise and growth of liberty in America, are all food for those who have learned to look for principles underneath material facts. Thoughtful, intelligent, conscientious Christian citizenship is the need of the Republic—otherwise we perish.

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP.

At the World's W. C. T. U. Convention last June a department of Christian citizenship was added to the long list of departments, and at the Twenty-second National Convention at Baltimore it was adopted into the National list. The object is twofold: First, that the unions may take up the systematic study of political science for their own good, and second, that influence along ethical lines may be brought to bear upon political parties and movements. It is expected that courses of study will be prepared and literature printed, so that the unions may be guided and helped thereby, and that they, remembering that "my people perish for lack of knowledge," will begin at the unit of organized government—the township, and study on through the county and city and state and national government, coming to know not only the form of each and its history, but coming to appreciate as never before that a right is the most important possession a person can have, and that human rights are the realities to protect which government is instituted. This study becomes imperative when we remember how many of our citizens cannot even define the different forms of government—theocracy, monarchy, aristocracy, democracy, republic, much less give the shades of differences existing even among republics. What do the masses know of the sanctity of government, for instance? Do they know that the interests of the people are so closely blended with their government that government becomes, or should become, the supreme interest of the people; that its character is sacred, because its preservation concerns the lives and property of all who compose the nation? Do they know that the foundation of government exists in the nature of men themselves, and that the true basis of government is, therefore, persons, and not things? or what other simple question may we not ask, even though it be entirely local, without securing an intelligent answer?

By this new department it is hoped to extend a knowledge of the science of government, particularly among women. It would seem that with our unions as study classes we might spring rapidly into this new field. It has been demonstrated in our great co-educational institutions that women show great aptitude and proficiency in this study. It is new to them, and a subject in which, in former years, it was customary to choke off a "female" questioner as though she were treading on dangerous ground and ought to be "shood" down like a precocious child before company; but all of this is now happily passed, and the inquiring woman still lives, and is irrepressible. Long may she live! And let her now in turn for better conditions further every effort to introduce the study of government into our public schools and to bring it within the range of the people at large, and above all, as she informs herself, may her influence be felt not only along lines productive of what is called good government, but for Christian citizenship, without which good government cannot exist.

For a beginning we must have first of all easy histories as a basis, then political primers and digests of such works as "The Government of the People of the United States," by Thorpe, and other kindred works. Let us have leaflets setting forth the simple fundamental ideas of government as embodied in our own nation. Let us be taught what rights are, what government is, and what the relation of the two. Let us know how our nation grew; how political parties grow; the duties of officers in town, city, state and nation; the duties of citizens; what the powers of congress, states and the people are; what courts of justice are; who are citizens, and why; and a thousand other things of which many people are ignorant, or only partially informed.

Why may we not have printed syllabi, a progressive series of them, topically arranged with references to a large number of authors by page and paragraph, so that a union can bring together a few books for reference, of the smaller and less expensive kind, and begin its work at once, leaving the great authors for a later time and more mature research, and possibly never having but a few choice books of reference; for after all, two or three authors well mastered are worth a world of superficial reading. When shall we begin systematically to investigate this large subject and thereby prepare ourselves to be successful in the world of reform, and capable and worthy citizens in the political sense when that shall come, as come it will?

Nor do we forget that emphasis is to be laid upon Christian citizenship. The ideal is to be kept ever before us—we must know the highest ethical standard, and seek to bring the world to that.

The cry of "whom can we elect?" must be changed to "Who is worthy and capable and honest?" If our Republic is to live it must cease to banish Aristides because it is "tired of hearing him called the just." It must cease to crucify Christ for the thirty pieces of silver.

WILLARD HEIGHTS.

It is known to many readers of The Union Signal that a business enterprise is on foot in Janesville, Wis. (the early home of our president) to purchase and present fifty acres of the old "Willard place" to the National W. C. T. U. The only action taken by the Baltimore Convention in reference to this movement was to indorse the action of the general officers in agreeing to accept this gift whenever it is offered, and to use it as a Rest Home for workers, or for such other purposes as the society thinks best. Rev. Mr. Maxham, who is trying earnestly to secure the property for this purpose, was thanked by the executive committee for his efforts, and it was clearly stated that the W. C. T. U. has nothing whatever to do with the enterprise except to receive the gift when made. Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, president of Wisconsin W. C. T. U., with the general officers (exclusive of the president), constitute a committee to accept and guard the interests of the proposed gift. We make these statements in reply to questions from friends of all the parties in interest.

A radical prohibition speech by a banker at a bankers' convention is, so far as we know, something new under the sun. At the annual meeting of the Georgia Bankers' Association, Hon. John H. Reynolds, president of the First National Bank of Rome, in his address before that body, denounced the liquor traffic in language that had the true ring to it. The subject was one with which a bankers' convention had something to do, he declared, because it was in the power of the business man and especially of the banker to do as much as or more toward abolishing the drink evil than any other citizen. "Somehow," he said, "it has become a fact in this age that the young men take their views of life more from business men than from any other class. The preacher is considered by the young to preach because it is his business, and the teacher is considered to moralize because he is paid for it. They are expected to do right in all things and to shun whisky especially. But not so with the business man. The young man gives him more latitude of action, and when the business man declares against alcohol the boy pauses and ponders. He sees no motive of self-interest. He sees no religious enthusiasm, but it looks like cold, clear business, and it is influential accordingly. Let our business, for one, demand that the man who works for us, from the teller to the office boy, shall not drink, and it will control the action on this question of more young men in town than all the sermons preached in our respective pulpits." Brave words and words of wisdom! It is the business side of the liquor question which appeals quickest to the young man eager to "get on in the world."

In view of the fact that many local unions neglect to take up that very important branch of W. C. T. U. work—work among the children, the National Convention passed a resolution making the organization of Loyal Temperance Legions the special work of the coming year. A prize is offered to that state showing at the next annual meeting the smallest proportion of unions having no active Legion.

Hereafter the Watch Tower will be prospective rather than philosophical, and will deal with facts rather than fancy.

The injunction against the sale of liquor in the temperance town of Harvey has just been granted. We are promised for The Union Signal such a résumé of the legal points as will be helpful to other places similarly situated.

It is said by men who have traveled far and near that no daily meeting in the United States is so well attended as the one in Willard Hall, and the results in the improved lives of men and women are commensurate with the wide interest felt in this steadfast effort to bring the tempted under the power of the "gospel cure" which never fails when loyally accepted and persevered in by victims of alcohol, tobacco and other narcotics.

We believe it would help you and help us." Mrs. Beiler writes in a private letter: "The Knights of Labor received me most enthusiastically, and when I said, 'I bring you most cordial greetings from our chieftain, Dr. Frances E. Bob Burdette gives this simple recipe: "My homeless friend with the chromatic nose, while you are stirring up the sugar in a ten-cent glass of gin, let me give you a fact to wash down with it. You may say you have longed for years for the free, independent life of a farmer, but you have never been able to get money enough to buy a farm. But there is where you are mistaken. For some years you have been drinking a good improved farm at the rate of 100 square feet at a gulp. If you doubt this statement figure it out for yourself. An acre of land contains 43,560 feet. Estimating, for convenience, the land at $43.56 an acre, you will see that it brings the land to just one mill per square foot. Now pour down the fiery dose and imagine you are swallowing a strawberry patch. Call in five of your friends and have them help you gulp down that 500 foot garden. Get on a prolonged spree some day and see how long it will take to swallow a pasture land to feed a cow. Put down that glass of gin; there is dirt in it—300 feet of good, rich dirt, worth $43.56 per acre."—Exchange.

OUR NEW WORLD'S W. C. T. U. TREASURER.

Mrs. Mary E. Sanderson, treasurer of the World's W. C. T. U., was born April, 1838, on a farm in the parish of Westbury on Severn, Gloucestershire, Eng., within sight of the beautiful town. Her mother was born in Bristol, of English and Scotch parentage. Her father, who was a native of the same parish, followed the sea for forty years, and sometimes took his daughters with him on his voyages to distant lands. The grandparents on both sides were "Independents" in the days when it cost something to stand for liberty of conscience.

In 1842 Mrs. Sanderson's parents emigrated to Canada, with six children, the youngest only six months old. They had the usual difficulties and trials consequent upon the lack of traveling accommodations. The father did not approve of the feudal system prevailing at that time in Quebec Province, so pressed on for five hundred miles, or more, finally settling about sixty miles north of Toronto, in the county of Simcoe, Ontario.

Mrs. Sanderson's earliest recollections are of playing on mossy banks, under trees which it was the delight of the children to climb. At that time mails were few and far between. A letter to England cost twenty-five cents. When farm produce was the only medium of exchange, it was a problem where to get money for postage.

The mother of Mrs. Sanderson became a total abstainer through reading an article written by a doctor in 1837 or 1838, wherein he spoke strongly against the use of liquors by nursing mothers. Those were early days in the temperance movement, and it was very unpopular. Later, on their removal to Canada, the father came over to the mother's side of the question, and total abstinence became the rule in the home.

A little Congregational church was formed by a minister from Massachusetts, whose wife agreed with him perfectly on the questions of temperance and anti-slavery. This church met for years in the minister's house, and from the date of its organization to the present, no alcoholic wine has ever disgraced the Lord's table. Educational advantages were few, but the family had a good library, and the Canada Temperance Advocate was a welcome visitor. Its stirring temperance songs and vivid illustrations of the evil effects of alcohol did much to strengthen the children in the faith. Mrs. Sanderson attended district school for a year or two while the pastor was teacher. She pays a loving tribute to her mother whose spiritual life had the most influence in shaping her character. She was a "new woman" in the best sense of the term. She had eleven children, of whom seven survive her. Her influence was strong on all moral and religious questions. The father often supplied the pulpit in the little church where for nearly twenty years the mother was Sunday-school superintendent. She had a Band of Hope among the boys and girls long before the W. C. T. U. was organized.

In 1861 Mrs. Sanderson was married. Her husband, the Rev. J. G. Sanderson, was a graduate of the Congregational college, then of Toronto, since removed to Montreal. After two successful pastorates in Ontario, one of five years in the city of Ottawa, they removed to Danville, Quebec, where they have lived since 1879. Here they enjoyed the privilege of living under local county prohibition and found the constant effort necessary to enforce the law to be a liberal education in practical politics. In 1883 Mrs. Youmans visited the Province and organized the W. C. T. U. of which Mrs. Sanderson became at once an active member.

The loss of a dear adopted daughter in 1886 was followed in 1889 by that of a dear adopted son. This year Mrs. Sanderson was called upon to part with her husband who passed away in the full maturity of his powers, beloved and respected. He was ever an earnest, consistent advocate of Prohibition, and the W. C. T. U. of the Province mourn for him as for a brother.

The subject of our sketch has ably occupied first, the presidency of the county then of the Province. At the World's Convention in London last summer she became the treasurer for the World's W. C. T. U., a position which her sterling qualities of mind and her consecrated common sense well fit her to occupy. Her home is at Danville, Quebec, to which address any contributions or donations for the use of the World's W. C. T. U. should be sent.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

THE Baltimore National Convention voted unanimously to invite Miss Agnes E. Slack, corresponding secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., to attend the next annual meeting.

MRS. LAURA ORMISTON CHANT has been made superintendent of the department of amusements in the World's W. C. T. U. Mrs. Chant captured the audiences every time she spoke at Baltimore.

AGRICULTURAL show booths are made a great success by the Queensland W. C. T. U. In Brisbane, the union intends erecting a permanent building at the exhibition, as their booth is now quite an institution.

THE offices and editorial rooms of The Woman's Signal, National organ of the B. W. T. A., are now to be found at 30 Maiden Lane, Covent Garden, London, W. C. All communications should be sent to this address.

JANE CAKEBREAD, the notorious London inebriate, who has been arrested and fined for drunkenness two hundred and seventy-eight times, has finally consented to become an inmate of the B. W. T. A. Home for Inebriates to which she was invited by Lady Henry Somerset. She is now four miles from a public house and is apparently content to remain.

THE National B. W. T. A. expressed its appreciation of the many helpful services rendered by Madame Antoinette Sterling in a happy way. Just before departing for America she was visited by a deputation of white-ribboners headed by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith, who presented her with a heart-shaped brooch set with diamonds, to which was attached a bow of white ribbon.

AT the recent Eastern Maritime Provincial convention a change took place which may be noted. The Maritime union has been dissolved into three provincial unions, which are: Nova Scotia, with Mrs. Charles Archibald, of Halifax, as president; New Brunswick, with Mrs. M. R. Atkinson, of Moncton, as president; and Prince Edward Island, with Mrs. C. W. Strong, as president.

THE election of office-bearers for the Dominion W. C. T. U. has resulted as follows: President, Mrs. A. O. Rutherford, Toronto; vice-president-at-large, Dr. Amelia Yeomans, Winnipeg; recording secretary, Mrs. McLachlan, Montreal; corresponding secretary, Miss Tilley, Toronto, and treasurer, Mrs. Tilton, Ottawa. The Dominion Convention has just closed its pleasant and profitable sessions at Quebec.

NEW offices have been secured by the British Women's Temperance Association at Albany Buildings, Victoria street, Westminster, London, where the headquarters will be located hereafter. The inaugural ceremony, when Lady Henry Somerset, president, declared the offices opened, was also made the occasion of a sale of work donated by the Branches for the aid of the Inebriates' Farm just opened at Duxhurst.

MRS. ELISABET SELMER, our World's organizer for Scandinavia, attended the meetings of the International Purity Federation at Colmar, where she met Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell. From Colmar she went to The Hague for a brief stay, where she received so many invitations that she will return there for work during the winter, after the new year. She is at present laboring in Finland, with Miss Alli Trygg, our enthusiastic leader in that country.

AN L. T. L. has been organized among the children of the Spanish Sunday-school in Concepcion, Chile. The pastors were requested by the W. C. T. U. to preach temperance sermons on September 22. Mrs. Ida A. T. Arms gives weekly talks to the girls of the American College on "Alcohol and the Body," and meets the children fortnightly. These are among the earnest efforts being put forth by a band of devoted workers in one portion of the great South American continent, where the field is ripe to the harvest.

SAID Mrs. Brentnall, of Queensland, in her last annual address: "We have an organized enemy to confront. We ought to establish safer places of resort for working men and young people at holiday time and encourage free libraries, evening classes, etc. One lady in Brisbane, from her mother-love, has started a reading-room for boys in her neighborhood. The Warwick union gives regular 'at homes,' which prove of great service as a counter attraction. The Ipswich union holds a monster picnic on Queen's birthday, with an evening meeting to finish. All these that draw men from public houses work for righteousness."

THE photograph of the World's general officers is a significant group, of which our president, Miss Willard, is the center. On her right is seated Miss Gordon, assistant corresponding secretary; on her left Mrs. Mary Sanderson, of Quebec, our treasurer. Miss Slack, World's corresponding secretary, stands at one side in the rear, and Lady Henry Somerset, World's vice-president-at-large, with hand upon Miss Willard's shoulder, is in the background, completing the happy tout ensemble. This group of representative women of our propaganda is an attractive picture to display, and will win friends for the cause. Send to Miss Agnes Slack, Ripley, Derbyshire, England, enclosing one shilling.

MISS ADELAIDE DAUGHADAY, an esteemed and well-known correspondent of THE UNION SIGNAL in Japan, visited Headquarters recently. Miss Daughaday was first stationed at Osaka as a missionary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and for the last two years has labored under the same auspices at Tottori. She is now enjoying a leave of absence, which will extend until September, 1896. It is pleasant to note Miss Daughaday's outspoken delight in the advances made by women in this country during her absence. From her long experience among Japanese women she is able to speak with authority on the condition of women in Japan, and on the progress of temperance among the people.

KENTUCKY.

STATE CONVENTION.

The fifteenth annual state convention of the W. C. T. U. was held in the Central Christian church, at Lexington. The church, which is the largest and handsomest in the city, was tastefully decorated for the occasion, with the National motto, plants and cut flowers. A bountiful lunch was served each day in the dining-room of the church.

There were seven superintendents present at the convention, and fifty delegates, representing twenty-four unions and three Y's. A much larger number of delegates were expected and signified their intention of coming, but failed at the last moment. The union at Augusta, which Mrs. Beauchamp organized in January, sent a strong delegation, and the president, Mrs. Ruth L. Rees, was elected one of the state organizers.

Thirteen new unions have been organized during the year, but the state treasurer, Mrs. Mary E. Bryan, reported some of the old unions behind with their dues.

The reports of the superintendents were good and showed advance all along the line. Miss Rena Mosher read a paper on young woman's work, which was very favorably received.

A gloom was cast over the convention by the sudden death of Mrs. L. M. Dodge, superintendent of social purity, who had written she would be present. Just before the time for her arrival, the news of her death was received.

Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, World's and National superintendent of evangelistic work, had charge of the services each day at the noon hour. Her gentle manners, and searching exposition of the Scriptures quite won all hearts, and many came to hear her who were not interested in the work of the convention. On Friday she had a touching memorial service for those whom death had claimed from our ranks during the year. On Sunday morning, by the invitation of the pastor, she preached to a large congregation at the Centenary Methodist church, on character building.

The first evening of the convention was given as usual to the addresses of welcome and responses—in behalf of the city, by the mayor; of the ministers, Dr. Bolling, of the Methodist church; the Woman's Club of Central Kentucky, Mrs. Scovell; the county W. C. T. U., Miss Gunn; the local union, Mrs. Beauchamp; response, Mrs. Rees, of Augusta. Miss Baer, of Louisiana, also gave a talk on physical culture.

The second evening of the convention Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, National corresponding secretary, gave an address to a large audience.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, of Lexington; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Nellie Arnspiger, of Lexington; recording secretary, Mrs. Mary Mac Clure, of Williamstown; treasurer, Mrs. Mary E. Bryan, of Millersburg; vice-president, Mrs. Cogar, of Paducah; state organizers, Mrs. Ruth L. Rees, of Augusta, and Mrs. Daisy Carlock Pollett, of Frankfort.

Sunday afternoon an immense audience gathered in the Central Christian church to listen to the annual sermon by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, at the conclusion of which our own gifted George W. Bain made one of his characteristic eloquent addresses. The president, in introducing him, said there was only one man in the United States that when he was announced to speak she felt sure there would not be a vacant seat, and that was our fellow-townsman.

At the conclusion of the exercises a collection was taken up for state work.

SCHOOL SUFFRAGE.

The new constitution of Kentucky granted to women of cities of the second class the right of school suffrage.

The first election under the new charter was held in Lexington, November 5. The women organized by appointing a joint committee from the W. C. T. U., Equal Rights Association and the Woman's Club of Central Kentucky. Mrs. Nellie Arnspiger, state corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. and local recording secretary, was made secretary of this joint committee, and largely to her faithful and efficient work was due the success that crowned the women's ticket.

A school board was nominated, composed of four women and four men. Prominent Democrats pledged their influence to keep the Democrats from nominating a school board, but two weeks before the election they did bring out one. Then the Republicans brought out a fusion ticket, but on account of some illegality, it was not printed on the official ballot.

On Friday preceding the election, the women were notified that the voting places for school board had been changed from rooms in private houses to booths on the street, duplicates of the booths used as general voting places. This some of the women thought most unfair, as most of the officers for school election were women, and as was apprehended many of them declined to serve.

It was in this emergency that the prompt and energetic action of our Mrs. Arnspiger told with such power. Up to this time she had shown great executive ability and untiring energy, some days making as many as fifty visits in the interest of this work.

Mention The Union Signal when answering advertisements.

On Monday, when the women began to send in their resignations, it looked much as if the cause was lost, but Mrs. Arnspiger sent for the president of the local union, Miss Emma Shaw, and together they went from precinct to precinct, seeing each officer and urging them to serve, and if she did not prevail with them she secured some one to take their places.

At eight o'clock in the evening when she thought her work was done, two more vacancies were reported, so she with her good husband, who has stood so nobly with her in the fight, went out and secured others to fill these places. The next morning she was at her post, as clerk in her precinct. The woman's ticket won by a majority of over five hundred.

We should not fail to mention the strong brotherly help rendered to our cause by Judge Jesse R. Morton, a prominent Democrat and chairman of the city Democratic committee.

At the Democratic rally Monday evening, he spoke for the woman's ticket, and stated that as a Democratic legislature had put the clause in the charter of cities of the second class, for the express purpose of removing the city schools from politics, it would not be undemocratic or in any proper sense scratching the ticket, to vote for the woman's ticket, but would be carrying out the Democratic idea of taking the schools out of politics, and through this speech many votes were won for our ticket. The W. C. T. U. is happy and rejoicing in the fact that three out of the four women elected to the school board are active, faithful members of the Lexington W. C. T. U.

News in a Nutshell

NEWS comes of the improvement in health of Miss Kearney, although it will be some time before she will be able to sit up.

IT was a noticeable omission that no mention was made in THE UNION SIGNAL Convention Number of the Missouri state song, which was written by a Missouri woman, and sung so well to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

THE fine stereopticon views used at the National Convention were taken to Baltimore by Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, of St. Louis, National superintendent of narcotics. By her courtesy they were also exhibited at Missouri state convention.

THE Schenectady W. C. T. U. have enjoyed a series of five lectures by Rev. W. Dewitt Lukens, of Herkimer. These were given in the Congregational, First Baptist and Emanuel Baptist churches, and in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A. Good audiences were present at each lecture.

OUR readers will grieve to learn that our beloved Mrs. Denman, of Newark, N. J., one of the original Crusaders, has had an apoplectic stroke since the Baltimore Convention, and now lies very ill in her home. No woman has prayed more tenderly or given more liberally to help on our holy cause.

OUR Convention number inadvertently spoke of Mrs. Major Scott as president of Southern California. Mrs. Scott was the honored and honorable representative of that state and extended the invitation for the convention to meet next year in Los Angeles, but Mrs. N. P. J. Button, of Riverside, is the very worthy president of the loyal Southern California white-ribboners.

THE recent looting of the office of the Twin City Lumberman is a reminder of early times. The dens of infamy at Marinette, Wisconsin, which Dr. Kate Bushnell exposed some years ago, have continued their wickedness up to the present. Last spring a few of the best citizens established this paper in order to fight them and show how the owners were hiding behind a prominent religious organization. They chose as editor, Francis R. Singleton, a son of Gen. and Mrs. W. F. Singleton, well known in W. C. T. U. and Prohibition circles. Fine home training gave him principle and nerve to undertake this important task at twenty-one. His first editorial announced the determination "to fight evil of any kind anywhere" in the vicinity declared for temperance, good government and a single standard of morals. In six months a majority of the disreputable houses have been closed, licenses revoked, Sunday laws enforced, many municipal abuses corrected and the chief of police compelled to resign. The law breakers did not relish being regulated; tried threats of personal violence, then attempted to bribe the editor. Still he continued to place all their doings before the public and to call on the officers to do their duty. On the night of the 8th the office was broken open and the plant destroyed. The act of violence called out new sympathy and capital and a new outfit better than the first has been purchased. Mr. Singleton was one of Anna Gordon's Loyal Legioners.

Cor. Secy's Notes

The past week has been filled with general officers' meetings and with plans for the coming year. These plans will be given in full in the Annual Report, but certain salient features must be stated at once in order that work may not be delayed:

1. It has been decided to renew the offer of last year, in part, and to promise Miss Willard, free of expense, to the state making the largest increase in membership, as shown by the books of the National treasurer, this gain to be reported one month in advance of date for closing said books.

2. The call to each state for an increase in membership of not less than five hundred is also renewed, and since Benefit Night proved so pleasant a feature of the Baltimore Convention, it has been decided to offer that also to all states securing this gain. The presentation of prize banners will be upon a different basis this year, the states having been grouped according to W. C. T. U. membership, and not according to geographical position or census reports. There are six groups, the first to include those states which pay as dues into the National treasury $1,000, or any amount in excess thereof. In this group are Illinois, Massachusetts, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania. The second group is composed of states which paid above $300 and below $1,000, and comprises California, Connecticut, Indiana, Maine, Michigan, Nebraska, New Jersey and Wisconsin.

The third, those paying between one hundred and three hundred dollars as dues, comprises California South, Dakota North, Dakota South, Delaware, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, New Hampshire, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont, Virginia and West Virginia.

The fourth, those paying between fifty and one hundred dollars: Colorado, District of Columbia, North Carolina, Texas and West Washington.

The fifth, between twenty-five and fifty dollars, Alabama, Arkansas, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, New Mexico, Tennessee and East Washington.

The sixth, and last group comprises all states which paid into the treasury, as dues, sums under twenty-five dollars. These are Arizona, Idaho, Indian Territory, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, Oklahoma Territory, Utah and Wyoming.

Will state officers please take note of this classification, and let it be the firm resolve of each, not only to win the banner belonging to her respective group, but also to rise one notch higher. We shall be exceedingly glad to schedule our work for next year entirely on high grade planes; to wipe out fifth and sixth classes, and forge ahead in the standard for first and second. The banners will be presented on Benefit Night, and will be given to the states making the largest per cent gain in each group.

Other offers for L. T. L. organization and for specific work by organizers will shortly be given in this column.

The place of the next meeting has not yet been decided but it will, we hope, be at one of the four points on the Pacific coast, whence invitations have been received. The question of transportation is still pending, and if one rate cannot be secured from the railroads, we have still four other places to fall back upon, all of which would entertain us right royally. We hope the decision may soon be made, as we want to send out our rallying cry for 1896 before the echoes of "Baltimore, '95" shall have died away.

Three new red-letter days were chosen at Baltimore, the dates to be fixed by the general officers: Mothers' Day, January 3d—the birthday of Madam Willard. Teachers'

Day—date not yet chosen, and Woman's Sunday—the first Sunday in October. On Woman's Sunday we are hoping to have the status of woman, ecclesiastical and otherwise, treated from the pulpit, and shall ask that a collection be taken for the National W. C. T. U.

Miss Willard is even now in the borders of the Southland in Lexington, Ky., where further plans will be laid. She wishes, during the winter, that all mail should be sent to her at Evanston, as she has arranged with the postmaster to forward it from there.

Treasurer's Corner

Again the Corner is open and active for another year. The great increase in appropriations for enlarged plans of work makes us anxious about the wherewithal. Since last report the self-denial fund has been replenished by several gifts. Frances E. Willard and Anna Gordon, $5; Mrs. Watts, Kentucky, $1; Ellen G. Clement, Ohio, $1; Mrs. M. T. Merrill, Maine, $5; Dora Alston, New Jersey, $1; Mary E. Perine, New Jersey, $3.50; Ella P. Brown, Maine, $1.10; Eliza Branstine, Missouri, $2; Mrs A. S. Way, Pennsylvania, $1; Amy Kellogg Morse, Wisconsin, $1; Mrs. A. L. Allen, Missouri, $1; Mrs. Hawks, Pennsylvania, Mrs. Hankins, Kansas, and A. P. Everson, Kansas, have sent smaller sums. The birthday fund has been augmented by gifts from Mrs. Babb, West Virginia; Mary E. Perine, New Jersey; Mrs. W. K. Kellogg, for husband, daughter and self; Clara S. Harza, South Dakota; K. E. Taylor, Illinois; Cornelia M. Dow, Maine; M. Y. McMahan and Mrs. D. Cunningham, Ohio; Miss Vandelia Varnum, New York, sent 70 cents for her sainted mother with a very pathetic letter.

The Woodbridge and Lathrap funds have been remembered by Thomas Boardman, Massachusetts, $6; Mrs. L. E. Coad, Iowa, $1; M. Y. McMahan, $1; Clara S. Harza, 50 cents.

Crusade fund, Mrs. Watts, Kentucky, $1; Mary E. Perine, $1.50; Sue E. Page, $1.85; Mary R. Webb, $1.

Donations have been received as follows: E. D. Smith, Illinois, $1.50; New Point W. C. T. U., $1; C. H. Payne, D. D., New York, $3; Dorchester W. C. T. U., $4.36.

Orders are coming in rapidly for Minutes which will be out, we trust, about Christmas, and said orders will be filled in the order of their receipt. Miss Willard's address is being sent out every day and the number will soon be exhausted. The full, unabridged address, twenty-five cents, Minutes, fifteen cents. Plans are being matured which will, we trust, bring into our treasury a more ample supply of funds for our work the present year.

After the labor and blessing of one of the best conventions ever held by the National, we are glad to come back to our little corner, where we can chat of the interests of our work. We begin another year's work under very favorable auspices. The reports given at Baltimore were very encouraging, showing more active work for organization, more earnest effort in all departments, and altogether the outlook was very bright. Many of our lines were lengthened and new stakes set up and in many ways our plans for the future were greatly broadened. This means more work, greater responsibility and more money. Our ever alert leader, Miss Willard, has suggested a plan that has been abundantly successful for raising money in Great Britain by the Temperance Alliance. This plan has been set forth by Miss Willard in UNION SIGNAL of Nov. 14. We trust that we may be able to employ agents who will push this plan and thus help our society to the sinews of war. Some of our good friends are sending in their birthday gifts and others are contributing to the Lathrap and Woodbridge funds.

I was disappointed in not being able to hold another treasurers' meeting at Baltimore for consultation with all state treasurers as to a more systematic method of collecting and forwarding dues. It was the sense of the state treasurers present that dues should be sent to National treasurer at least quarterly, in order to avoid the necessity of borrowing money to pay expenses during the first few months of the year.

I am glad, my sisters, to be associated with you for another year of earnest work, and I shall be glad of any helpful suggestion, and am sure I shall have the same considerate sympathy in the future that I have ever received at your hands in the past.

Helen M. Barker

DEAR ORGANIZERS:—Press of work since Convention has crowded this Corner, if not from my thought, at least from my immediate personal supervision. Now I am sure it is time we were welcoming each other for another year of work. You will miss some familiar names from the roster, and will note the addition of others. Several have resigned; one is out of the country, and others are for the present occupied with other duties. Those who come to us are new only in this line of work, having been identified with us in most responsible positions for years.

I shall send a circular letter, outlining plans of work, and assigning UNION SIGNAL dates very soon. I want earnestly to request that this Corner be not left vacant once this year, but that through it we keep constantly in touch with each other and the field. Let your paragraphs be brief, pointed and pithy. Conservation of space is of vital importance in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL, therefore the tersest communications will be most welcomed.

Lest I debar myself from this column by my own rule I must come to a period, with an earnest prayer that we may be entering upon such a year of prosperity as we have never before known.

Yours to capture every stronghold in 1896.

Publisher's Notes

THE BIBLE READING for December is by Mrs. Anna M. Vail. Subject, "Scriptural Architecture." Our readers do not need to be told that this will be found a most helpful and instructive reading. It treats of (1) The Foundation, and (2) the Superstructure. The former, points out the writer, is the "Solid Rock" and is something we cannot manufacture for ourselves; it is already made for us—given to each to build upon. For the superstructure, we as builders are personally responsible. We must "take heed" how we build thereon. We must co-operate with the Master Builder. Price one copy per year, 12 cents; ten copies to one address, $1.

RESPONSIVE READING for December presents to local unions the aims and the claims of the new department of "Christian Citizenship," and is written by the National superintendent of that work, Mrs. Anna F. Beiler. It tells when and where and why this department was created, enunciates the principles which underlie the movement, sets forth a plan of work and gives other helpful information and suggestions for the carrying forward of this new branch of W. C. T. U. work. Price one copy per year, 10 cents; 13 copies to one address, $1.

"Some time ago I ordered one copy of the 'White Ribbon Hymnal,' with which I am more than pleased, but one copy only makes me long for more that the girls may use it every Sunday night when they sing English hymns. I have just asked for the Crusade spoon. It will be a wedge by which I can get the conversation on to temperance when we have guests."—Extract missionary letter, Japan.

No one thought to teach the minister's little girl a verse for Children's Sabbath, as she was so small. She said she could say one, and her teacher lifted her up on the organ. Bonniwell folded her little hands demurely, and, with the most seraphic smile, said softly but distinctly, "My papa's fabrit vegetable is custard pie."

Breathless Would-be Passenger.—Agent, when does the half-past five train leave? Agent—Five-thirty. Passenger—Well, the new church clock has twenty-seven minutes past, the post-office clock has twenty-five minutes past, and your clock has thirty-two minutes. Now, in the name of Bradshaw, which clock am I to go by? Agent—You can go by any clock you like, but the train's gone.

The Naval Architect who designed the ocean racers, the Paris and the New York, has written for the next volume of The Youth's Companion an account of a possible steamer that may cross the Atlantic in four days or less, liquid fuel being used.

"It seems to me," groaned the sufferer, apostrophizing the reflection of his aching tooth in the looking-glass, "that for as small a customer as you are you have lots of nerve."

Customer—Give me a dozen fried oysters. Waiter—Sorry, sir; but we're all out of shellfish, excepting eggs.

The Youth's Companion promises to surpass itself during the coming year. There is hardly a famous man or woman in Great Britain or the United States who has not been among its contributors. Among the story-writers for the year 1896 who will contribute to its columns are Frank R. Stockton, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Clark Russell, C. A. Stephens, Mrs. Burton Harrison and Rudyard Kipling.

It aims, of course, primarily to be entertaining, but this does not debar it from publishing remarkable contributions by such world-renowned men as the Lord Chief Justice of England, Judge Oliver Wendell Holmes, ex-Speaker T. B. Reed, Camille Flammarion, Gen. Nelson A. Miles, Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson and the Dean of Salisbury. Is is not unlikely that The Companion will also have another contribution from Mr. Gladstone, who has written on three occasions for it.

A Boston woman, who was trying to recover a parcel that had rolled under an electric car, turned apprehensively to the conductor, and inquired if she would receive a shock if her foot touched the rail. "Not unless your other foot is on the trolley wire," gravely replied the official.

"I think they died of an eruption, sir," answered the student.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Home Hints

Asbestos cloth comes by the yard and is a most convenient material to have on hand. A single thickness of it between squares of cloth makes the best kind of an ironing holder.

---

If ever you have asked any cook of "ye good old times" to give you directions for preparing some favorite dish, a delicious pudding or cake, your soul has no doubt been tried by the indefiniteness as to measurements. "Use your judgment," "according to taste," "a lump of butter," and a little or less of this or that being lightly used expressions. Women in the modern cooking classes are not expected to "use judgment" in matters they know nothing of but are taught that accurate measurement is necessary to ensure success in cooking.

All dry materials should be sifted before measuring.

A cup holding just half a pint is the standard measuring cup. A cupful is all the cup will hold without running over—full to the brim. A scant cupful is within a quarter of an inch of the top.

A tablespoonful of flour, butter, or sugar is a rounded spoonful.

A teaspoonful of salt, pepper, or spice is a level teaspoonful.

A heaped spoonful is all the spoon will hold.

Half a spoonful is measured by dividing through the middle, lengthwise.

A speck is what you can take on the tip of a penknife.

---

To prevent the formation of a crust of lime or other sediment in the teakettle, place in it a clean oyster-shell. The shell will attract to itself the particles in the water. The best preventive, however, as we have said before, is to wash and dry the kettle daily, as you do other cooking utensils.

---

Brooms will last much longer if dipped every week or two into strong suds. This treatment keeps them from getting brittle and they are much easier on the carpets.

---

Some one says that when it is necessary to see the tongue of a child who is too young to understand what is wanted, touch its upper lip with sweet oil. This will cause the child to stick out its tongue.

---

The following was recently given in Young Women, but it may not reach the older readers, and it appeals to one's love of sweet cleanliness: Oatmeal bags as bathing sponges are highly recommended for giving a velvety softness and whiteness to the skin. Take five pounds of oatmeal ground fine, a half pound of pure castile soap reduced to a powder, and a pound of powdered orris root. Cut a yard of thin cheesecloth into bags about four inches square, sewing them on the machine, and taking care that no untied ends of thread be left where a break may let the contents ooze out. Mix the soap, oatmeal and orris root thoroughly, and fill the bags loosely. Sew up the opening in each bag, and lay away to use as required. They are used as a sponge, dipped in warm water, making a thick, velvety lather, and wonderfully softening the skin, while the orris root imparts a lasting fragrance.

Milk is a very nourishing food containing all the elements of nutrition in a quickly available form. Hot milk is an excellent restorative for those who are exhausted by fasting or by severe or long-continued exertion, for the feeble and those suffering from insomnia. Milk should be sipped, never taken in large swallows.

---

Very many people do not care for soups during the hot weather, but now this nourishing and relishable food should be regularly served for dinner. There is no limit to the variety and excellence of soup, and with a little forethought it is very easily prepared. The soup stock should have a suitable piece of meat and bone for its foundation, boiling in the proportion of one quart of water to each pound. Beef is the favorite meat. Into the soup-kettle put the oatmeal or other cereal left from breakfast, cold potatoes, leaves of lettuce, bits of lemon peel, celery, etc. After boiling several hours, skim off the grease, strain the soup through a fine sieve. Then fresh vegetables, macaroni, pearl barley, rice, or whatever seasoning is desired for that day should be added. The soup left from dinner should be returned to the stock kettle, more meat added and on the morrow, by a change of vegetables and grain, a different dish will be ready.

Signal Notes

SINCE the Methodist Board of Church Extension in America was first organized twenty years ago, it has handled $5,498,803 and aided 9,767 churches. The largest collection in a single year was in 1892 and amounted to $158,940. The contributions during last year were $127,743, the lowest since 1888, and 302 churches were aided.

THE Prison Congress at Paris this year discussed the decoying of young girls for purposes of prostitution, and recommended that the chief powers of Europe and America should endeavor to arrive at some agreement for concerted action against the systematic decoyers of girls for foreign prostitution. The question will be acted upon at the next congress in 1900.

THE following resolution, soon to be presented in the New Zealand house of representatives by one of its young Maori members, Hone Hoke, indicates a clear view on the part of the savage (?) women who have urged its introduction: That no intoxicating liquor be sold or given to any man of the native race, and that no license be renewed or fresh license be granted within a mile of Maori land.

A MAGNIFICENT million dollar library and a million dollar endowment for its art gallery were the recent gifts received by the city of Pittsburg from Andrew Carnegie. At the dedication the donor delivered an address, advocating the massing of wealth in order that its use might be put to higher and nobler ends in great public institutions than by its distribution in driblets among the many who would fritter it away in needless expenditure!

THE action of unchristian nations in making serious preparations for war was referred to with frequency and with sorrow at the recent sessions of the Peace Society at Birmingham, England. In six years the war budgets have increased at the rate of twenty-three per cent. In Europe there are four million men in standing armies, on which twice as much is spent as was spent twenty-five years ago—a foolish and tremendous waste of men and money.

A NUMBER of public men and leading women have been interviewed as to the effect of the introduction of women into the national Legislature, following the adoption of equal suffrage. Senator Morse is certain that tobacco will be tabooed. Senator Hansbrough looks for better laws and better air. A half dozen are confident of the best results, while several are certain of only evil effects. It is said that the election of a woman to Congress would raise an interesting discussion. Why not try it?

A RECENT statement made by Mayor Strong to the effect that the number of saloons in New York city ought to be cut down one-half led to investigations by the New York World which developed the fact that New York has more of these industrial (?) institutions in proportion to population than any other city in the United States,—7,300 saloons, one to every 234 persons. Chicago's 7,000 saloons is a ratio of one to every 242, Boston has one to 500 or 1,080 saloons, while Philadelphia has 1,355 saloons, or one to every 841 persons.

IT is an encouraging sign of the times that the Red River Baptist Association, Louisiana, affords in its recent adoption of the report of its special committee on temperance. It was the sense of the report that the church should withdraw her fellowship from any member who advocated license and that the association should withdraw its fellowship from any church a majority of whose members persist in this course. Ten years ago the moderator of this association came to the gathering with his Bible in one side of his saddlebags and his whisky bottle in the other!

THE Women's Industrial Council of London has for its worthy object, the amelioration and protection of working women. It has no restrictions of creed or political party, and its work is carried on by a series of committees who obtain funds, collect statistics and investigate the conditions of working women and children, publish leaflets and pamphlets and arrange lectures; tabulate existing information; promote trade organizations, classes and social clubs; note parliamentary proceedings, promote legislative action, and take an active part in the election of women to public office. All of which heralds the better day for the burden bearers of the great metropolis.

"How did it happen," said the smart young turkey to the sedate old gobbler, "that you got through the winter without occupying the place of honor at some fashionable dinner table?"

"Because," responded the gobbler, with a far-away look in his voice—"because nobody axed me."

THE FAULTLESS QUAKER DISH WASHER

is a humane device designed to lessen the labors of the housewife, and to make easy that dreaded task of dish washing which comes about with surprising regularity. But by its use dish washing is no longer the dreaded task, as of yore. This dish washer is manufactured by the Quaker Novelty Co., of Salem, Ohio, who, upon receipt of postal card, will mail their illustrated catalogue containing testimonials of those who have used their washer. Good, live agents are wanted by this firm to sell this device, and it is claimed to afford lucrative employment.

A Trumpet Blast.

THE WOMAN'S TEMPLE, Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 28, 1895.

Beloved White-Ribbon Comrades:

The mission of parables is not yet ended, and a text may still be taken from Webster's Spelling Book. Therefore hear and heed:

"The lark and her young ones heard the Farmer and his son planning to ask all their relations to come and help them harvest the ripening field; the mother-bird told the frightened little ones that there was no danger. Again the Farmer planned to invite all his neighbors, but the wise mother-bird said, 'We are still safe.' At last she heard the farmer say, 'Since relatives and neighbors have failed us we will do the work ourselves,' and then the mother-bird fluttered her wings and said to her little ones, 'Now we must seek a place of safety.'"

It is easy to tear down; it is difficult to build, but the builder blesses and is blessed.

Some years ago we set out to own a Temple that should be the home of the W. C. T. U., of its Publishing House, its School of Methods, its daily Gospel Meetings, and should also by means of its rentals furnish a fund for our National work and help the work of the State unions by paying to each from the annual income an amount proportionate to what had been subscribed in that State.

The Temple has been reared and is the finest office building architectually on the continent.

The set time has come for us to concentrate our powers upon paying for it. Five dollars from each White-Ribboner with some large sums from those who can afford to give more will pay every dollar indebtedness resting upon it. Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, who has worked for it most unselfishly from the beginning, has been making an earnest effort this year to raise $300,000 among people of wealth in order to get control of the entire capital stock; Mr. Marshall Field having headed the subscription list with $25,000, conditioned on the whole amount being raised by January first. Owing however to the continued distressing financial situation, and sickness in Mrs. Carse's family which has confined her to her home, she fears she will be compelled to ask for six months longer time in which to raise the desired amount.

The Temple Trustees have secured a Committee of Counsil of the ablest and most trusty business men in Chicago. They are Lyman J. Gage, H. H. Kohlsaat, John R. Walsh, James W. Ellsworth, R. E. Jenkins, Thomas Kane, J. Harley Bradley, Wm. E. Hale, Norman B. Ream, Wm. G. Hibbard, Rev. Dr. John Henry Barrows, Rev. Dr. H. A. Delano. No better guarantee of the feasibility of the enterprise could be given than these honored names.

While God reigns in heaven and White-Ribbon hearts beat steadfastly on earth we will never desert this enterprise or take a backward step. What ought to be done can be done. We ought to own the Temple; it is folly to excuse ourselves by saying that it has cost more than we are able to pay. However that may be, the Temple is built and its ownership is within our grasp.

Let any officer of a local union who loves the Temple and means to see it paid for, take this letter of your General Officers to the next meeting of the local union and there let it be read with the request that each member pledge to raise within the next six months five dollars. This can be accomplished in any one of the ways noted in the Temple column.

There was never so good a prospect for our ownership of The Temple as now. Well-to-do women should give as the Lord has prospered them, and let those whose means are limited say, "I will give five dollars, or I will raise it in the next six months among my friends," and the work is done. As soon as it is known that we are determined to raise this money many purses will be open that have been hitherto closed, for "nothing succeeds like success." All through the rank and file of our great society there is an ardent desire to disprove the unfriendly prophecies that "we can never own the Temple," and that "all we have paid in will be lost." We admit the greatness of the enterprise, but we do not believe that it is greater than our ability; only let us make the effort and we shall find that many "mickles will make the necessary muckle." When the people, rich and poor, friedly and otherwise, see that we mean to do this work ourselves, we believe ~~we~~ that we shall have help from unlooked for quarters, but help or no help let us pay for the Temple. We ought to do it and we can do it. Let us do it now. Let us pray devoutly and then hammer away stoutly.

We are yours to help lift the cap stone of the Temple into its place with shouts of "Grace, grace unto it."

HOW THE CHICAGO W. C. T. U. WAS STARTED, WHAT IT HAS ACCOMPLISHED AND WHO HAVE ASSISTED.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD, LL.D.

The Chicago W. C. T. U. was organized in the winter of 1874 as the outcome of its crusade work, and I became president in September and established the first headquarters ever connected with a local union. The Young Men's Christian Association, 148 Madison Street, gave me the use of a room rent free on their third floor, in which I opened a noon meeting in December of that year, twelve persons being present. It soon grew so that we were given the free use of lower Farwell hall, where we remained until April, 1883. When we were told that we could no longer have Farwell hall, Mrs. Carse at once determined that we should have a headquarters of our own, and has worked to this end from that day to the present. She became, in 1877, my successor as president of the Chicago Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and still holds the position. I would say, in justice to Mrs. Carse, that for all her hard work of twenty years for temperance, including the building of the Temple, she never received one penny for her services; on the contrary, she has given freely of her means for the support of the work.

As soon as Willard Hall was finished, in 1893, the gospel temperance meeting was again established and is conducted daily, except Sundays, from 12 to 1 o'clock. It has the largest attendance of any daily meeting with which I am acquainted. In connection with this meeting a great deal of work is done in the way of helping men to lead a sober life.

ENTRANCE TO CORRIDOR, WILLARD HALL.

It has long been our purpose to establish a school of methods for temperance workers in Willard Hall. This was the pet project of Miss Mary Allen West, who was, perhaps, our ablest expert as a teacher of methods. Mrs. Benjamin, who is now the superintendent of this department, and who has recently been giving a parliamentary drill to the famous Sorosis of New York, will be in Chicago soon to inaugurate this work.

The Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union has its headquarters in the Temple. It has under its care the following enterprises:

First, the Anchorage, a home for friendless women, founded in 1886, when I became superintendent of the purity work of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Naturally enough, I wished to begin in my own city, and turned to the local union of which I had for many years before been president. Mrs. Carse warmly seconded my effort, and through the generosity of business men, we opened a reading and coffee room in Third avenue. This was so successful that a home was soon established, Mother Prindle (now of the Florence Crittenton Midnight mission, New York) being at its head. Dr. Kate Bushnell, a former pupil of mine at the university at Evanston, and a woman of great devotion and force of character, was invited by me to take up purity work in Chicago. Dr. Bushnell chose the location of the Anchorage and entered upon her career with great enthusiasm. Her work has broadened until now she has visited (in company with Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew, formerly one of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL) nearly every country of the globe, and these two ladies are associated with Mrs. Josephine Butler, as leaders of the purity work in the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Miss Alice Bond, of Evanston, then assumed the leadership of the Anchorage, which has grown steadily. It was removed last May from 125 Plymouth Place, where it has been located for the last eight years, to a commodious house at 1408 Wabash avenue, where its doors are open day and night to any girl or woman in trouble. Mr. Charles Crittenton during the last three years has given to the work one thousand eight hundred dollars, and in his honor the name of the Anchorage was changed to the Florence Crittenton Anchorage. Its work is to visit the slums, station houses and hospitals, rescuing women and girls, taking them off the street and caring for them until situations or homes can be provided for them. Hundreds have gone out from this mission who are now earning an honorable living, while many others have been sent to their homes and have been restored to their friends and parents. The daily average of the family is thirty-five. The cost of operating the mission is about three hundred dollars per month. There are no endowments, and all this must be met by a few women who give their services without money and without price. Last year two hundred and forty-two different young women and girls found help and situations and two thousand lodgings were given.

The Bethesda Mission was opened in October, 1883, in Clark street, in what was aptly called the "Black Hole" of Chicago, in a neighborhood where poverty, sensuality, misery and crime held sway. For twelve years it has been a lighthouse, a port of cleansing to this dark neighborhood. The first year a nightly gospel temperance meeting was started for the intemperate, a free kindergarten for the little ones, an industrial school, a Sunday-school, a free dispensary and a mothers' meeting. By the second year, through the indefatigable efforts of Mrs. Carse, the first crêche, or day nursery, in the city was established. She secured the sympathy and aid of that noble and generous-hearted woman, Mrs. Cyrus McCormick, who ever since has continued the liberal patron of this branch of the work. In May last the mission changed its quarters to a better house for the children. It now occupies 1349 Wabash avenue, and the evening gospel temperance meetings have been dropped.

The Talcott Day Nursery and Kindergarten owes its first years of success to that noble philanthropist, the late Mrs. Mancel Talcott. At the earnest solicitation of Mrs. Carse she was induced to pay the expense of the work for the first year, the Central union having the entire charge of the mission. Mrs. Talcott was so well pleased with its success that she continued until her death to support it, since which time its two most generous patrons have been Mrs. William E. Page and Mrs. A. C. Chambers, with other good women, who gave smaller sums. The Talcott was opened at 169 West Adams street, November 1, 1885, under the able chairmanship of Mrs. Charles Goodman, and Mrs. Fletcher as matron, which position Mrs. Fletcher still fills with great ability. The mission moved a few months ago to 133 Morgan street. The house is most commodious, and is surrounded by large grounds, which make a fine playground for the little ones. It is the home center of the poor workingwomen of the neighborhood, who can enter its hospitable doors as early as six o'clock in the morning and leave their little ones until evening, calling for them when their day's toil is ended. This mission is a center of Christian work; the poor families in the vicinity are visited and helped in every way possible; the sick are sent to the hospital, and efforts are made to reclaim the fallen. An industrial school is held every Saturday afternoon, and in the evening a meeting for the parents. Last year this mission served thirteen thousand eight hundred and forty-one meals. There was an average of thirty-three children daily in the nursery, and about forty in the kindergarten.

The Hope mission, now situated at 226 Milwaukee avenue, was established in 1889, and is intended to reach our Scandinavian population. A most consecrated Scandinavian woman, Mrs. U. F. Bruun, devotes all her time without salary in the conduct of this mission. Scandinavian newspapers and books, as well as those in English, are to be found in the reading-room, which is open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M. Every evening, as well as on the Sabbath, gospel temperance meetings are held in both languages. Attached to this work is a Sunday-school, a medical mission, and an employment bureau for both men and women. This work has no rich patrons to help support it, and is hampered greatly for lack of funds. Mrs. C. B. S. Wilcox, 333 Warren avenue, is chairman.

In this connection it should not be forgotten that the Chicago Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union inaugurated the movement of placing matrons in the police stations, furnishing the room and paying the first matron's salary for over a year, when they were relieved from this tax by the city paying the salary. Mrs. J. B. Hobbs was the chairman of this work from its inception, and until the city would no longer allow us to appoint the matrons.

The Woman's Temple, Chicago, has become the headquarters not only of the National, but the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Here we publish our World's organ, and it is also the National organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in this country, THE UNION SIGNAL, with five editors; The Young Crusader and the Young Women being the official organs respectively of our work among the classes they represent.

The Woman's Hospital is located in Diversey avenue, near Lincoln Park, and has become an institution well known throughout the nation, and in temperance circles the world over.

The little cold water girl fountain, at the door of Willard Hall, is perhaps the most helpful and attractive one in the whole city, and another lovely fountain has been placed inside the broad corridor leading to Willard Hall. I mention these because it is impossible to separate in the thought of any intelligent person the work of the local union from that of the National and the World's societies.

"Who knows but on this altar-place
May shine the glory of His face.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Malachi 3:10.

The first bugle blast of the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. has been sounded in behalf of the Temple, calling upon all white-ribboners from Maine to California to fall into line and each to do her part in paying for the Temple, as God has given her wealth or talents to use in His service. Those that are able to give thousands are asked to do so, and from that amount down to five dollars as God has prospered each. Many even with great self-denial cannot give the latter sum, but they are not debarred the privilege on this account, so long as they have neighbors and friends to aid them in raising their quota of five dollars. All that is needed is, "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether" and the work will be accomplished. Let a holy enthusiasm spring up in the heart of all white-ribboners to secure the Temple free from debt. Such enthusiasm as fired the hearts of Christendom in the eleventh century when Peter the hermit, with fervid eloquence, plead that the city which contained the holy sepulcher should be set free from the tyrannical domination of the cruel and unbelieving Turk. Shall we hear the women of our Crusade cry out as the Crusaders of that day did, "God wills it! God wills it!"

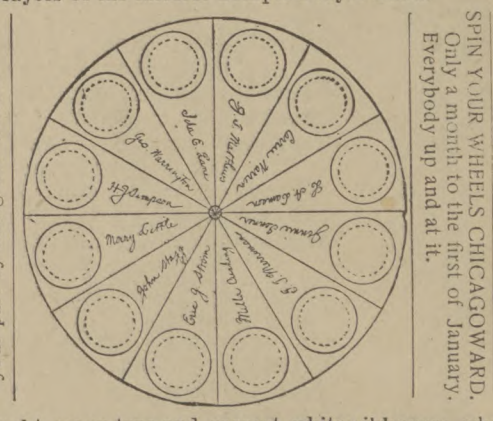
Three vacancies on the Board of Temple Trustees, caused by death and removals, have been filled by the appointment of three very able women—Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop Center, Me., National superintendent of peace and arbitration; Mrs. Anna M. Hammer, state president Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., and Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, state president Michigan W. C. T. U. The Temple Trustees have been further strengthened by the appointment of a Board of Counsel of twelve of the foremost men of Chicago. Three are presidents of three of the largest banks in the city; one is a leading lawyer and president of the Metropolitan Elevated Railroad; two are capitalists and owners of large buildings in the business district; three are merchants at the head of great firms widely known all over the country; one is the proprietor of two of Chicago's greatest dailies, the Times-Herald and the Evening Post, and two are noted divines. In addition to all this backing of good and true men, to have the National officers meet the issue squarely by issuing the proclamation contained on the first page of this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, is a consummation which will bring cheer and joy to the hearts of thousands who are warmly interested in the success of the Temple, and which I am certain is in answer to the prayers of the faithful Temple Prayer Band.



No doubt many true and earnest white-ribboners, who have but little of this world's goods, are saying: "I want to do my part for the Temple, but it is impossible for me to give $5 out of my own purse." You can do it, my sister, in two ways, outside of personal giving; either by sending for five Temple Wheels and asking outsiders for dimes to fill them, or else try the new device we are now getting up. It is in imitation of a Temple brick, with a picture of the Temple upon it. On the back of it is the following inscription: "This is to certify that —— ——, of ——, state of ——, by the payment of——, is the owner of —— bricks in the Temple at Chicago, the World's and National Building of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." This will be signed in autograph by Miss Frances E. Willard, as President of the World's and National W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Carse, as president of the Board of Temple Trustees. Twenty-five cents is the price of a brick. Of course any number can be sold to one person and entered upon the receipt on the back of the brick. A two-cent stamp sent to me will secure a dozen bricks, and $5 ought to be realized from this number, as among each one's acquaintances there could easily be found at least one or two persons who would be glad to be the owner of four bricks in our House Beautiful, others two, and others one. With a little persistent work this plan will prove a great success. The Temple bricks will be ready for delivery in two weeks.

All orders for Temple Wheels, Temple bricks, mite-boxes and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Peru has a new cabinet.

News comes of the defeat of the Cuban insurgents under Maximo Gomez.

Alexandre Dumas, the famous French author, died at Paris, November 27.

The Canadian Parliament has been called to meet January 2, to settle the Manitoba school question.

The Cherokee Indian legislature has passed a bill making it impossible for any white man to obtain property rights by marrying Indian women.

More than three thousand Christian Endeavorers prayed unitedly on Thanksgiving day for the conversion of the well-known infidel, Robert Ingersoll.

Jabez Balfour has been found guilty of frauds in connection with Building Loan Associations in London and sentenced to fourteen years penal servitude.

Three buildings belonging to the Armenian mission at Marash have been robbed and burned by Mussulmans. Two students were killed but the five missionaries escaped.

The Chicago Barbers' Protective Association, in view of the antagonism of the Liquor Dealers' Association toward Sunday rest, have determined to reciprocate by active prosecution of liquor-sellers who are keeping their places open in violation of state and city laws.

MRS. BENJAMIN, of Michigan, Mrs. Hammer of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Maine, have been added to the Board of Temple Trustees to fill vacancies. Also a committee of twelve men has been formed, consisting of leading bankers, merchants, capitalists and clergymen of Chicago, who will act as a committee of counsel in promoting the interests of the Temple.

WE trust that all local unions will make special effort to observe "Anniversary Day," December 23. We would suggest a public meeting in which the history and development of the white ribbon organization is the prominent feature, making use of stereopticon views, wherever practicable, "to point the moral and adorn the tale." It is fitting that we should from time to time consider our "beginnings," that we may not forget, as we are apt to do, the workings of the spirit and the "hidings of our power."

THE People's party, Prohibitionists and Socialists have united in Boston to nominate Prof. Frank Parsons as candidate for mayor. This is a very important step and will furnish a good example for reformers in other parts of the country as to how they may "get together." They will find that the way to do this is to "rally round a candidate." B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, writes: "Professor Parsons is one of the noblest men I have ever known; he is comparatively young, is clean, progressive, earnest and high-minded in every respect."

"MAN proposes, God disposes." Instead of being out in the field actively at work for the Temple, as she had planned, Mrs. Carse has been for the past three weeks a constant watcher at the bedside of a fever-stricken son, a prey to such anxiety as only a mother can know when her own is brought to the verge of the shadowed valley. We are glad to report that Mr. David Carse is slightly better. Mr. John Carse, her second son, sailed November 27 on the St. Paul for a business trip to Europe of several months' duration. We are sure that the hearts of the Temple Praying Band and all friends of Mrs. Carse will go out to her in these days of stress and trial, and that her name will be carried often by white-ribboners to the throne of grace.

ONE of the good results of temperance agitation and education is seen in the policy, now so common, which makes saloon-keepers ineligible to membership in secret societies. It indicates a growing antagonism to the liquor traffic most encouraging to Prohibitionists, for we take it for granted that it is not the liquor sellers themselves that these societies object to, but the "way they make their living;" not the men they desire to ostracise, but the business. A certain powerful order has, in highest tribunal assembled, recently decided to exclude from its fraternity all "saloon-keepers, bartenders and professional gamblers." We rejoice when any society, secret or otherwise, takes this advance step, but at the same time we are struck by its inconsistency. For these same men who vote out the saloon-keeper continue to vote in the saloon; they have made the saloon business as legitimate a part of our political and social economy as the business of the grocer or the real estate dealer. If the drink traffic be "necessary" why debar the saloonkeeper from privileges enjoyed by men in other trades? Why class this perfectly legal business with the illegal occupation of the professional gambler? We do not understand—though doubtless the "legal male mind" can explain—(1) why these societies should discriminate between the man who sells drink over the bar by the glass, and the man who sells it from the brewery or distillery by the barrel or the car load; and (2) why the man who keeps a saloon is any more detrimental to the interests of secret societies than the man who by perpetuating the saloon makes the saloonkeeper necessary.

THE Fifty-fourth Congress convened at Washington in regular session on Monday, December 2, with Hon. Thomas B. Reed as speaker. The Republicans have a large majority in the house, while in the senate the "stalwarts," including the two senators from the new state of Utah, will occupy half the seats. Six of the remaining half are held by Populists, which gives them a balance of power in the upper house. As the chief business of old party politicians just now is getting in trim for the presidential race of 1896, it is not likely that any very radical legislation will be undertaken by this Congress. Many important matters, however, will be forced upon the attention of our solons, among them the increase of revenue sufficient to meet the expenses of government, the proposed retirement of greenbacks, the pooling of railroads and other corporations, and the Alaska boundary line.

THE Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, of which Mr. D. L. Moody is president, has a fund at its disposal to be used in the free distribution of books and Testaments among prisoners in our jails. Mr. Moody asks the coöperation of ministers, W. C. T. Unions and other local Christian workers, in addition to that of regular prison chaplains, in this noble effort. He requests those who would like a package of books to communicate with him at his home address, East Northfield, Mass., enclosing some card or reference to show their good faith. The books will be sent postpaid after the form of application has been filled out. Up to the end of October the association had distributed twelve thousand six hundred and nineteen volumes, putting them into twenty-three different states. "If I am spared," writes Mr. Moody, "I hope to put a book into the hands of every prisoner in the United States before a year passes." The supplying of good literature to the shut-ins of our prisons and jails is a work which white-ribboners consider most important, one which they have found very productive of good results, and we would urge local unions, especially our prison and jail workers, to respond promptly to this generous offer and to coöperate with Mr. Moody and his associates in thus lending a hand to those who so sorely need such uplift.

IT is an item of great significance that two new organizers among colored people have been appointed by the general officers. Mrs. Sarah J. Early, of Nashville, Tenn., is a woman well known in her own state, and one whose work will reach over a much wider radius. Mrs. Georgia Swift King, president of Georgia union No. 2, is a woman of unusual ability. Under her leadership, this union is coming rapidly to the front in that state. In the recent religious conferences held in connection with the Atlanta Exposition, as the result of Mrs. King's speech, before the state Congregational Association, a strong resolution was passed and unanimously adopted by that body providing for the presentation of a memorial to the General Assembly of Georgia, requesting the enactment of a law securing scientific temperance instruction in all grades of the public schools. A committee was appointed to prepare the memorial and bear it to other religious bodies in convention assembled for their indorsement. The next day she spoke before the colored M. E. Congress on the same subject, and at the close, the entire body composed of leaders in that denomination—bishops, presiding elders, and many prominent men—unanimously agreed to give the entire weight of their influence to the measures brought before them. Mrs. Booker H. Washington, of Tuskegee, Ala., has been invited by Mrs. Thurman and the general officers, to serve as lecturer in this department, and Mrs. Preston, of Detroit, Mich., the well-known educator, has also been asked to serve in that capacity. With the addition of these able and energetic workers the work among colored people, North and South, will be more vigorously and systematically pushed than ever before.

A SONG OF HOPE.

BY MARY A. LATHBURY.

[This beautiful little poem won the first prize offered by Mr. H. N. Higinbotham, of Chicago, for "people's songs." We feel sure our readers will thank us for giving it to them,]

Children of yesterday,
Heirs of to-morrow,
What are you weaving—
Labor and sorrow?
Look to your looms again;
Faster and faster
Fly the great shuttles
Prepared by the Master.
Life's in the loom,
Room for it—room!

Children of yesterday,
Heirs of to-morrow,
Lighten the labor
And sweeten the sorrow,
Now—while the shuttles fly
Faster and faster.
Up and be at it—
At work with the Master
He stands at your loom,
Room for Him—room!

Children of yesterday,
Heirs of to-morrow,
Look at your fabric
Of labor and sorrow,
Seamy and dark
With despair and disaster,
Turn it—and lo,
The design of the Master!
The Lord's at the loom,
Room for Him—room!

"WHAT ACCUSATION BRING YE?"

BY HELEN STEVENS ELDRIDGE.

The long gray afternoon is waning at last. The fitful sun scarce comes into the old court room windows, and when it does force itself in slanting lines through the funereally opened shutters, it is only to call into action the thick spread dust of years.

The tiny particles float like a swarm of insects in the sun-rays, and there is an endless moving of feminine hands in vain attempt to fight them elsewhere, till the old judge, from his bench, wishes impatiently that every woman in the world had been born a Venus of Milo.

Where is there a silence so heavy as the silence of an expectant court room?

The sharp creak of a perilously overloaded bench or chair occasionally breaks the spell, and people come to the realization that they are numbed from too long sitting in one strained position. Whereupon every other bench gives forth its own particular wail, when a "Sh-h-h!" from some over nervous listener is sounded and immediately physical discomfort is forgotten and the anxious wait begins again.

The jury had been sitting for days, listening to the evidence in the case of "The People vs. Mrs. Hannah Redwood," and they had now retired to consider the same and render a verdict.

It was a most amazing crime, and occurring as it did, in this mere handful of a town, provoked intense interest among its inhabitants.

For hours the prisoner had sat, gazing with sightless eyes at the once white wall opposite her.

Prisoner! A crime! Incongruous terms, indeed, as applied to that little old gentlewoman; for such she undoubtedly is, despite the worn look of her thin black shawl and the greenish cast on her ample bombazine bonnet.

The face under the bonnet is what draws the attention. Charles Lamb somewhere speaks of "the plain face divine." Such is Hannah Redwood's.

It is not a face acquainted with smiles, except they be grave ones. A face well seamed with the wrinkles of sixty-odd years, and years that had not dealt kindly with her; for the lines are drawn as with acute mental suffering.

Though her eyes are dulled with much weeping, their expression is clear and steadfast. Poor hunted eyes, they often, these days, drop pitifully at the stare of the sullen, curious crowd. It is a mild face, yet somehow in that very mildness there is strength; perhaps dormant for years, crushed by the never-ending struggle to live, but there.

Small and ordinary she certainly looked in the gray light of the dying day, but upheld by an innate strength of purpose and honesty of conviction that would be hard to baffle, as it is for the shrewd old lawyer to understand.

He had practiced many years and known the secret sources of many a character, but he would find himself at odd moments studying intently this worn face beside him and muttering, "Curious."

Her thin, white hair is fastened back under the bonnet with care, her shawl pinned closely across her shoulders. Her gloves have been repaired so many times, and the fingers taken in a seam's width at each giving way, that the hand is now well drawn up on the fingers, but the stitches are even and fine, and the whole in keeping with the painstaking little woman who wears them.

Indeed, neatness pervades the very atmosphere around her, envelopes her, claims her for its own.

Each time as that penetrating "Sh-h-h" passes through the crowd before her, her eyes quickly seek those of her one friend, the old lawyer; then as the sound subsides she resumes her former quiet gaze.

"Wonderful," he thinks, "she is scared as a child at a sudden noise, but cares naught for a rope around her neck."

And tilting back his chair till his head rests against the wall, he goes over and over again in his mind the confession he had heard from her lips. She was loath to talk, for the fear of defending herself was uppermost, but sympathy was not thrown away on Hannah Redwood, and little by little she had told to him her life as only she could tell it.

"If she would let them hear it that way here," he thinks, with a grim smile, "I'd risk it; I'd risk it; but now—stupid souls—there's not a mother's son of them but would hang her!

"Everybody was Cal Redwood's friend, old and young liked him; even that's against her! He was a big-limbed, big-hearted fellow, there's no gainsaying it. Well," sighing, "talk she won't, and there's the end of it. Women are pretty much all alike inside, be the surface in the rough or polished down to a smooth palaver. What enigmas they are, to be sure, and she beats 'em all!"

She was born in Swansea, Wales, in 1831, to an heritage of poverty and drunken wretchedness. The only child of an overworked, sickly mother and a drunken brute of a father, who never forgave her the being a girl, much less forgave the woman that she did not give him boys after his own miserable image.

Before the child was thirteen years old—and here the lawyer muttered a curse as he thought of his own darling at home—"Thirteen, and a baby, a mere baby!"—and yet that little body over there was married at thirteen, to a good-for-nothing, burly Welshman, eighteen years her senior.

He was about to emigrate to America, and having no friend who would care to accompany him, for pure love of him, and no money to buy one to bear with his tempers, he bethought himself of what he could get for the asking.

A woman, of course!

And even his crude intellect comprehended that they would stick to a man like nothing else.

He spoke of his plan to his alehouse crony, and was rewarded on the spot by the offer of his girl.

And thus it came about.

The child was allowed no voice in the matter, indeed, cared for none. It could be no worse. And within a few weeks' time she was carried from wretchedness in Wales to its counterpart in America.

And the old lawyer recalled, with a suspicious dryness in his throat, her own broken words regarding that time.

"God knows, your honor, I tried to be a gude helpmeet to him. Eleven bairns I bore him; but what with beating, and no eating in the house before they came I could na keep them strang after they got here.

"We buried them one after another; they cried their little breaths away—or," here she leaned forward with the tears filling her eyes, and whispered,—"it's only to you, who are that gude to an old woman, that I am a-telling of this, your honor,—he killed 'em! My bairns and his.

"They did not cry like the many bairns I've cared for since; it was like the sea-wind of a grewsome night. It would bring tears to your eyes, your honor, it was that scart and mournful: and when he was in drink it made him mad! God forgive his soul!

"God is gude, your honor. When they brought my man home all bleeding from a fight, I was that scart that before morning was come God gave me another bairn to put to my breast, my Callie, my gude boy. And Redwood knew.

"They picked me up from the floor—we had but one bed, your honor, and Redwood had that—and carried me to see him the last time.

"He said to me, 'I'm that glad, wife, that glad. I've been a curse to you, but he'll be a help. Tell him about his father, how drink made him a brute to the best wee maid in the kingdom. Tell him never to touch it onct.'

"And, your honor, he was that weak he could not raise hisself up in bed, but he did then sit right up straight, and say, with more strength than ever drink did give him:

"'Tell him about his father, how drink made him all devil! Promise me, wife. Tell him if he but touches it that first time it is all over with him, for he is born of a drunken father. Do something to stop him, wife, for if he gets but one taste he will go from bad to worse, and you can't stop it sure. Say you will—'

"He was like a crazy man, your honor, but before I could say a word he fell back on the bed and they told me he was dead.

"He was not a gude husband to me, your honor, but he was all I had in this new country and I felt bad for him many a time.

"But the great ladies up on the hill were gude and kind to me, your honor, and I soon had plenty of work. I worked night and day, for the pennies came slow, but they were enough for my boy.

"And he grew to such a bonny boy, your honor; none of the great ladies whose bairns I cared for had bonnier ones than he. And he was a gude loving little boy to his mother, your honor, and he did love his mother always, did Callie.

"I kept him much at home with me; too much, for when he did have to go out away from me he was innocent of the wrong everywhere, and trustful, oh, so trustful of everybody.

"I never told him of the bad of his father. I couldna, your honor, he was that proud and sensitive. But it was wrong in me not to do as Redwood bade me—and his own boy, too!

"God has punished me for it!

"The years went by, I canna tell you how fast, your honor, till my boy was sixteen and wanted to go to work 'for mother,' as he used to say—this many a day he had been doing a bairn's work, the running of errands, piling of wood and the like.

"Well do I mind his first big money. He was just past eight; it was the third of July he came running in with it. One dollar and a half!

"He was so proud, and to think what he did, your honor—gave his mother one dollar for 'fire-crackers'—he thought like I would enjoy them,—and he kept fifty cents for hisself! That was how he always did, my gude, gude boy."

Here her little old-fashioned face had beamed with love and pride.

"My heart was heavy all the while at his having to leave me, but I knew it must be, for I was fast getting old and could na work as I once had.

"The shop where his father worked, was a bad place, so I put Callie on a farm, among the cows and sweet-smelling fields, and he was to come home each Sunday with his mother. It was a nice man who owned the farm, and I did na know he had an 'overseer.' No, I did na know."

The overseer's face as he had stood giving his testimony rose up before the lawyer's mind; a bloated, sinister face!

"He ruined my boy, your honor, he ruined my boy, my only bairn. May God forgive him, I can na."

"When did you first notice the difference in Callie, Mrs. Redwood?" he had asked her.

"Only within the last few months, and then it was in such small ways that I would sometimes say to myself, 'It's nothing, only an old woman's fidgets.' But I know now!

"He did na sit down in front of me when he talked to me, and let me look straight into his eyes, his honest brown eyes, as he knew I loved to look. No, he did na, because he could na.

"Oh, my boy, if mother had only known!

"It was not that he was not considerate and wanting to wait on me.

"Why, that last Sunday he put me in my rocking-chair and bade me sit quite still, while he got our nice little dinner.

"And the next morning when he left,—he had to go before the sun's rise, your honor,—he kissed me good-by, as he always did, but when he got out to the gate he turned and came back again to where I stood in the door to watch him go. I said,

"'Have you forgotten something, my boy?'

"He put both arms around me and lifted me off my feet,—he was big and strang for his nineteen years, and I'm a bit undersized, you see.

"I laid my head over on his shoulder, I was that proud of his big, strang arms, I could na help it.

"He looked at me like he would never stop, then a drop fell on my face.

"Callie was crying, was unhappy.

"I put my hand up to his dear, sunbrown forehead:

"'What is it, my boy, tell mother?'

"'It's nothing, mother, dear, only I had forgotten something,'—he half laughed and hugged me closer.

"'I forgot to tell you again that you are the best little mother the Lord ever made, and I love you, love you, love you! Mother, say not "God bless you, my boy," but "I bless you." Say it, mother.'

"I said it to please him, and I hope it was not 'taking His name in vain,' your honor. It did not seem much harm, and Callie asked me to!"

What a pure keynote of mother-love she had unwittingly touched in those simple words, "and Callie asked me to."

"He seemed satisfied, and put me down to the floor and started off again.

"When he got far up the street he took off his cap and swung it around at me, and called back:

"'Good-bye, dear mother; I'll be home early Sunday, and we will have a long day together."

Here her voice had been barely audible.

"He was home early Sunday, your honor, but I was not with him.

"I shall never spend any more Sundays with my boy, for the Holy Word says, 'Thou shalt not kill!' and I—I—when they brought my boy home to me as they had so oft his father before him,—oh, God, that I have to say it! My bairn, you did not mean to break your old mother's heart, did you? I could think of nothing but Redwood's words—'Tell him if he tastes but once it will be all over with him.'

"My bairn to be like his father! Oh, no, no. It was too cruel!

"I opened my Bible where I never failed to find my help and guide, and my eyes first saw, 'For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.' I read it word by word, over and over again.

"It was God's word to me!

"Callie must bear his father's curse, and in the end—the end—oh, there must be no such end! I got down on my knees with my Bible in my arms and prayed for deliverance. A sudden thought came and with it strength.

"I gave him the powder and he never woke again.

"Oh, it was that hard, your honor, that hard. He was my all. And I loved him, oh, your honor, my poor words cannot tell you how I loved him. My heart was full of him day and night!

"And I knew after that I could never go to him, my own boy in heaven. Only those who obey the commands have a place there, we know, but he is safe; safe with Him who suffers the children to come unto Him and forbids them not.

"Oh, Callie; your old mother's arms are empty and her heart is dead, but she still has joy—joy enough to know that before you had staid here to sin against Him in your father's footsteps you were taken into Jesus' arms to be His child forever. Safe! My boy!"

But hush—there's a tramp of heavy feet and a voice commands, "Silence in the court."

Mr. Marvel springs from his chair and turns to his client to support her.

Small need. She returns his look. It fairly takes his breath away.

"That truly must be the 'peace which passeth all understanding,'" he thinks.

While he is still gazing in wonderment, the sun—so reluctant has he been to shine this day—bursts suddenly forth with one long last gleam before he falls behind the western hills, throwing a gloriously golden ray direct upon the sad old face of the woman, surrounding and lighting it till it is truly beautiful.

Beautiful as with an uplifted inner light.

What is it?

Men and women lean forward breathless to watch.

Then as the jury file one by one into their accustomed places, and the prisoner at the bar rises to her feet, her face still upturned to the sunlight, those near her see her lips move, and hear the whisper—

"And He took them up in His arms, put His hands upon them, and blest them."

"UNINTELLIGENT FAITH."

BY MARY H. HULL.

When I heard Dr. Josiah Strong say at the late school of social economics something about the past era of unintelligent faith and its mighty triumphs in the world, and something about the mightier triumphs to come in the future, through a faith full of understanding, built upon the past—of it, yet not of it, but beyond it—and heard his plea to the church that she awaken to her present great "social mission" and opportunity in the world, a whole set of wheels were started in my head, remembering how the dear old W. C. T. U. twenty-two years ago ran up against this same sphinx-like attitude of the mother church, complacent in her unapplied—that is, her "unintelligent—faith."

Oh, how we bumped our heads against her hard heart and begged her to help us apply her teachings, to see us through, but she would not. How lonely we were, battering away with our prayers in spite of our own "unintelligent faith" against a church and ministry that was still less intelligent (as to living issues) and with much less of faith than we. Yet how we have found since it was "all for good" for us and for our faith that we were thus forced to work out a more practical, intelligent way. Now we see and hear others bumping themselves against this same hard bosom, asking for her food and help. Well, she has it, we know she has it, and that she has no business to wean us from her care and love and protection. There is where every last one of us got our living in the first place, and it is still where we ought to nestle and be comforted and rest beneath her warm shadow. We refuse all other comforting. But our mother is dazed somehow; asleep, perhaps.

It is an awfully sad, hard fact that the day for preaching and singing about our mansions above is over. Faith must do something more than teach and preach and sing; it must actually "get down to business" or it will have little to teach and preach and sing about. It must (and can) remove mountains of ignorance and vice. It must go to work and drive saloon mansions and all sinful mansions off the earth else it will find very few mansions in heaven.

The little ones and lost ones of our Father's earth need housing. The question is, how can we with Jesus prepare these mansions now and here, spiritually and materially, for the blind and bewildered ones? How can we help them into this our Father's house now (if now it will be for hereafter), how bring heaven into earth and earth into heaven? How else shall "Thy kingdom come"?

What a work the church has done to get the world ready for this! What a marvelous triumph is hers! Her mountain of transfiguration cannot be taken from her and be leveled to the ground of materialism. We could work without visions, without her transfigured facts. Has she them in her history? She has! And she must still assemble her children together inside her palaces or on her pine boards (it makes not much difference which) with one accord in prayer, in praise, in worship and in rest; sing, rejoice, preach and pray, but this must not be all. This alone is as suicidal as it is to never frequent the holy place, the mercy seat, the ark of the covenant for which the Mother Church stands. We cannot, however, stay there, it is wicked and untrue to the vision to do so.

By the "social mission" of the church is meant nowadays that the great mother lend herself and spread herself in some way in order to gather to herself her brood of children. She has hatched them and is responsible for them, since the warmth of her blood runs in their veins. Her eldest, the Y. M. C. A, her next, the W. C. T. U., her third, the Y. P. S. C. E., and many other children, are all her direct, legitimate heirs. Like the hen on duck's eggs she has brought into life some children who take to the water and unto themselves wings and webbed feet and hoofs, nevertheless, she is responsible as the truth for these things and must in time, in some intelligent way, mother all the honest efforts her children make in applying her own faith and love and sympathy to sick humanity. Humanity has no other Saviour than Jesus the Christ, He whom she strives to represent and to stand for.

Marvelous indeed are the signs of the times for one who has eyes to see! The common people are so ready, are so hungry and thirsty for the gospel that is "business." They are ready to receive all the words of the Word, the man Christ Jesus. He is their "Desire," their "Deliverer," and they know it. Where shall they find Him as He is in some living, applied scheme of life? The harvest is more than ripe,—the real laborers few.

"The time is come," said a late writer, "when men [women] must take sides according to their conception of the mission of Jesus Christ to the world—whether He came to save an individual here and there from misery in another world, or whether He came to establish a social order of righteousness which shall include all human relations here and hereafter."

"Ye visited me not. I never knew you. Ye took me not in." How awful these words are going to ring in the ears of many a disciple in "good and regular standing" in society and of the church! How we ought to know from our Leader's own life and teachings and visitings, His healthy and happy ways of working and resting with the people, that neighborliness, Samaritan ways of contact with people were the only ways that represent Him in the world.

Jesus was Master, Servant, Neighbor, Lord, Child and Father all in one; humble and utterly helped and helping from below; masterful, intelligent and powerful from above. He was God's minister, dispensing His love and wisdom, His judgment and truth and beauty, doing His deeds, not by being dressed occasionally in Sunday best in the synagogue, but by mingling in every social way with people. He was intelligent on His Godward side, but best of all, intelligent on His human side. He understood the people, knew their names, occupations and their needs, the need of the whole man, woman or child, mind, soul and body in the home or shop, in daily contact—"in business," we would say. What folly, then, it is for our mother church to sit so dumb and unintelligent, so unsympathetic with all the reforming movements of her children who are bidden by the Master Himself to be about their, the Father's, business, the mother church's business.

I have myself to minister; I need my mother's sympathy, which is the congregated sympathy of fellow Christians. I must have the Christ Himself. I must bring to bear the power of God Himself upon the actual conditions of our day, its sorrow and sin in society. I must consume this sorrow and sin—the death of it—save it by life, the Bread of Life. It is what I am here for, it is what the church is here for, to right things for the individual and to bring about a social order that will protect this individual.

Jesus had to have help. He had to have companionship, and He bade His disciples to be together with one accord. It is man's sacred bonds in church, the body of Christ. Paul had to have it, and he organized it, saying, "Forget not the assembling of yourselves together." Intelligent, healthy and practical faith is that which is a living faith in a living God, and it is that kind only that works and that God has anything in common with.

Women are said to be naturally prone to "friser questionable topics and to poser insoluble problems" and to confound matters (I suppose by this) in general; but in matters of faith how is it? Have we not acted according to a practical, intelligent faith, rather than an unintelligent faith, as W. C. T. U. workers from the very start? Were we not the first to really religiously establish the industrial and kindergarten schools and down-town gospel meetings—at Chicago especially?

Not that I would seek glory and credit for ourselves, but I would seek truth, so that our future may be guided by it, for we have learned that faith must work as well as pray. We have surely found that out. What band of loving believers ever learned it so hardly and so well as the W. C. T. U? But we learned it and other believers learn it the moment they go to work to really save this world instead of the next. We have our faults and make our mistakes grievously, but not the worst mistake, namely, that of doing nothing.

Intelligent faith is that which is not childish, unintelligent and inexperienced, and though it has been greatly blessed of God in the past, because it trusted and believed His word, He has honored and always will honor all who put their trust in Him, and He honors only that which does trust Him. But He doesn't always make use of the foolish things of this world with which to confound the mighty. He makes best use of wisdom, knowledge and understanding and working, practical, intelligent faith.

SOCIAL SETTLEMENT WORK IN CHICAGO.

An Interview with Prof. Graham Taylor.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

On returning to my native land I learned that a distinguished theological professor had gone with his family to live in what in England would be called "the slums." This was a phenomenon so unlooked for that I wrote him that when I came to Chicago I desired to see "Chicago Commons" as he calls his settlement, and to study it at short range. He replied cordially, and in November I was "personally conducted" over the place.

Like the now famous "Hull House," Professor Taylor's "Commons," which is on the West Side at 140 North Union Street, near Milwaukee Avenue, was once the residence of a well-to-do family, but railroads, manufacturing establishments and tenement houses crowded them out years ago. The building is a spacious old homestead fifty feet wide and ninety feet deep and has forty-four rooms. The basement provides a large assembly hall, used also for a kindergarten, a boys' clubroom and gymnasium, class rooms for cooking and industrial training, etc. The first floor contains parlor, class rooms and room for girls' clubs, in which college graduates and working girls meet and mingle. Italians, Scandinavians, Germans and other nationalities predominate over the native population of the ward, in the midst of whom there is but one English speaking church to 30,000 inhabitants.

Professor Taylor is a unique figure every way among the ways of men. He is of medium size, has fair hair and complexion, an intellectual and genial presence, strong gifts of voice and pen and a heart aflame for humanity. His education and culture came to him through the channels of the Dutch Reformed church, his college and theological course having been taken in New Brunswick, N. J., his wife being the daughter of Professor Demorest, a member of the theological faculty.

After seven years in the country he went to Hartford, Conn. Here he had a church among a swarming population, but it was comparatively empty, and the better he preached, from an intellectual point of view, the fewer people came to hear him. The fact is that he was on the old lines of preaching and the common people did not hear him gladly. Loneliness and isolation threw him into contact with the unchurched masses. He made friends with the police, cab-drivers, the fire department and others of that class and they came out at last to hear him speak, for he had made up his mind to the following proposition: If the church will work for those who need it instead of those it seems to need, then it will have no trouble about the congregation.

This solved the problem. His congregation became one of working people; it rose from seventy-five to a thousand; there was no lack of money; well-to-do people helped him; four paid assistants were furnished. The people saw that he was interested in them, and was carrying out the gospel declaration, "I seek not yours, but you."

Here he worked eight years, and then the officers of the Hartford Theological Seminary asked him to become a professor in their institution. He said he would do so if he could retain his pastorate and make the church the clinic of his class room. Sociology, as well as Homiletics, Liturgics and Polity were the subjects treated. When he had been professor and pastor four years, Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) agreed to establish a department wholly devoted to Christian sociology, if he would become a member of their faculty, and here he has from one hundred and seventy-five to two hundred students whom he is helping to train for the practical application of Christianity to common life. He is also allowed to attend conferences, Y. M. C. A. conventions, ministers' meetings, etc., and to bring these subjects before them, so that he is a sort of minister-at-large in the various denominations of the great Northwest.

It must be something refreshing to the young theologues under Professor Taylor's care to have him bring in workingmen, strikers, trade unionists, government officials and specialists that they may learn from the lives of these men what is their point of view. For he makes of his class-room a laboratory for the study of the social problem, and he sends his young men out to the police court, the poor-house, the jail and the rescue missions, as well as the churches, that they may come in contact with the classes that Christianity undertakes to transform. This is quite a different method of "preparing for the ministry" from what is practiced in most seminaries, and to my thinking more in harmony with the gospel "of the hundredth man" rather than "the ninety and nine that safely—lay."

Professor Taylor teaches his students that they must stand between employers and employés, interpret one to the other and interpret our common Christianity to the unchurched masses. They must be fearless and frank, "willing to be boxed on both ears by the two contending parties," as they will be without fail. It is their business to apply common Christianity to the social conditions of common life. The students of five theological seminaries meet at the Commons once in two weeks, to study with specialists in sociology, so that the work which centers here is far-reaching in its results.

Professor Taylor told me that before deciding to come into this neighborhood he took a vote of his family, children (four) and all. He felt that in these days, so few children among the well-to-do classes know anything about self-denial, that it would be most helpful to them to live in a community where, from the nature of the case, they would acquire the habits of "give" as well as "take."

I asked his only son, a bright boy of fifteen, what impressed him most in this new life, and he at once replied, "I didn't know they were so intelligent, and I found that what they seemed to care for most was to help each other."

The personnel of the Settlement is most interesting. Women are here who could make seventy-five dollars a month, but they come at subsistence rates, mostly without a salary. Miss Hofer, a young German American lady who graduated from the Froebel Pestalozzi Institute in Berlin, declined an assured position with adequate support to share the risks of starting this work for the needier children. Miss House, the daughter of a white-ribboner and a teacher of experience, is here on subsistence rates. She has the industrial school for boys and has taught the older ones so that they are now helping her to teach the young ones. Mr. Erickson goes to the infirmary and poorhouse where he conducts Sunday-school, manages the Christian Endeavor Society, preaches and does personal work among two thousand unfortunates and is beloved by all. Miss Colman came from the Deaconesses' Training School to a self-sacrificing work of wide and varied usefulness.

The men are college graduates, one from a German University, Rev. B. F. Buller—his family consisting of Mrs. Buller and their three little boys—is pastor of the Tabernacle church, five blocks away. He is a modern man, one of those practical ministers who descends to the use of a stereopticon, that he may carry home his ideas to the minds of the people. Mr. Hegner is the head worker, and though a graduate of a Normal college and a Theological seminary, has accepted the appointment of garbage inspector for the district. He patrols the alleys and thus saves the lives of little children. He superintends "Plymouth Winter Night College" in which hundreds of people study not only the common branches, but dressmaking, cooking, home nursing, civics, history, language, music, etc. A dispensary and hospital and a medical college are outgrowths of this movement, under the management of an able body of volunteer physicians. A "house committee," of which Mrs. Professor Taylor is chairman, manages the housekeeping. She is a charming and accomplished lady, and in hearty accord with her husband in his devoted work. All of these and many more live in peace and good neighborhood in the Commons, which has been plainly but comfortably fitted up for public and residence purposes.

I spoke to a meeting of workingmen and another of young women, and it seemed to me the place was bright with beams of gospel light. Family worship, reading of the Scriptures with familiar hymns of church and home—these are "familiar in their mouths as household words." A Sunday neighborhood vesper service gathers many from the neighborhood for a quiet half hour of rest, prayer and song.

Now among what sort of people have this theological professor and his family come to dwell? They are mostly a self-respecting, self-supporting, hard working people, who need less what "the residents" at the Commons have than what they are and can be to them. Many live in basement rooms, their children never see a flower, and nothing is so familiar to them as a garbage box. However, they are now learning what flowers are, for they are sent in by good friends from the country and distributed. Whole families live in one small room with a heap of potatoes in one corner, bed in another, table and stove in the third and fourth. Many of these Italians are fruit peddlers; the women scrub floors, gather up coal and refuse and live as they can. They have no idea of cleanliness. They come straight from bed to kindergarten, eating their "chuck" breakfast on the way, or coming without, as it happens. When the little ones have been in the kindergarten for a few weeks, the mothers will come to their teacher and say, pointing to their little hands and faces, "No dirty. Come and see house—clean!" They do not seem to be unhappy, but they are totally undeveloped, morally, and are most unwholesome in their ways of living.

Professor Taylor and his corps of workers believe that arm chair Christianity is at a discount; that you can only help people by going where they are; that no matter how much money may be given or how much good-will, no one has really fulfilled the gospel commission who does not give himself. The Settlement is based on this principle. It is an honest and heroic attempt to "go about doing good," to prove that Christianity leads people to such a life as that of our Lord, a simple every-day life of blessing to all with whom His life thus comes in contact.

The W. C. T. U. cannot engage in any work more helpful than precisely this, and I am persuaded that it will not be long until we shall be able to announce in the columns of The Union Signal that we have founded a Settlement in Chicago on the basis of those grand words given us by Lowell in his "Vision of Sir Launfal":

"Who gives himself with his alms feeds three, Himself, his hungering neighbor and Me."

THE QUARTERLY MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE B. W. T. A.

Dear Union Signal:—I know your readers will be glad to have a little account of our recent meetings at Plymouth. The occasion was one of special interest, owing to the fact that the quarterly meeting of the National Executive Committee was held under the auspices of the Plymouth Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association, of which Miss Agnes Weston is the beloved and honored president. Many of our workers went down on Saturday and held meetings in some of the most important churches on the Sunday preceding the great demonstration in the Guild hall which took place on the Monday following. These Sunday services are creating much interest in our work. They are under the supervision of Miss Mary Gorham, who is the National superintendent of our evangelistic department. A Bible reading was conducted on Monday morning by Mrs. Pearsall-Smith, who is beloved all over England and whose Bible readings draw together large crowds of people. The public meeting at night was a demonstration in a marked sense that the Temperance party are certainly not "wiped out" in Devonshire. The great hall was packed from end to end; beautiful flowers decorated the platform, and one of the preliminary items in the program was the presentation of a beautiful bouquet of flowers to Lady Henry Somerset, and one to Miss Agnes Weston, by two charming little white-ribboners who made appropriate speeches. After Miss Weston had addressed the audience from the chair, and Mrs. J. K. Barney had given a short Bible reading, our president, Lady Henry Somerset, delivered an address. I wish I could adequately describe the effect of Lady Somerset's address on the audience. Rounds of applause followed her statement, that though the Temperance party had suffered a defeat, they were not yet beaten, and that while we pledged our faith to the principle of the Direct Veto, we should nevertheless welcome from whatever government in power any legislation in the direction of temperance reform. It might be hard for the temperance people to wait, but God was on their side, and would give them the victory.

The following afternoon a conference was held in St. Andrews Hall where Lady Henry Somerset, supported by Dr. Sarah Anderson Brown, and members of the National Executive Committee, gave an address on the subject of the "Farm Colony at Duxhurst for Inebriate Women." The hall was packed with people, men and women appearing equally interested in the subject of the new scheme which the British Women's Temperance Association (through the superintendence of Lady Henry Somerset) is carrying out. Lady Henry described the plan of the colony, and pictured the homeliness of each little cottage, with its five patients and nurse-mother, or matron, at the head, and the happy family life which it was the main object of the scheme to establish. Her Ladyship mentioned the fact that Jane Cakebread, who is now at Duxhurst, is not a degraded and sodden drunkard as the public suppose her to be, but a woman whose mind is evidently unhinged and one whom a little drop of drink will thoroughly upset; and pleaded for such cases as these to be sent to Homes like Duxhurst rather than to prison with hard labor for a month, as it is the habit of the magistrates in England to do.

As a result of this conference, the Plymouth branch of the B. W. T. A. have promised to raise £220 to build a cottage which is to be called after their beloved local president, the Agnes Weston cottage.

The series of meetings included a reception given by Miss Weston to the national executive and friends at the Sailors' Rest, Devonport. The Sailors' Rest is a renowned place, for it is built on the site of what once was a vicious public house. Owing to Miss Weston's splendid efforts the sailors now have a magnificent suite of rooms with a bright and cheery bar where they can get temperance drinks and good, nourishing food, a reading room and a large hall for meetings and entertainments. Lady Henry Somerset attended the reception and addressed those present and was presented by a little sailor boy with a bouquet of white flowers. One of the features of the evening's entertainment was the singing of nautical songs by one or two of the sailors among whom Miss Weston carries on her splendid work.

We greatly miss the dear Chieftain, but we rejoice with you in the satisfaction and pleasure it must be to have her once more in her beloved native land.

Believe me with loving greeting your comrade,

Mary A. Ward Poole,

GENERAL GRANT.

Dear Union Signal:—In a recent interview with m Bishop Newman spoke at length at my request, on General Grant. He has put on record a minute account of those last wonderful days. Speaking of Grant's religious life he gave two impressive facts as follows: "It was on a Sunday evening in March of 1885, when I called and found him alone with Mrs. Grant. I informed him that three hundred Methodist preachers, with their bishops in conference assembled, had stood up and offered prayer for his recovery. His response was in accord therewith, and he informed me that a company of friends in Boston had leagued together to pray for him every day, and that the little children in the neighborhood had sent him word that they added his name in their little prayers when they prayed for father and mother. I saw his honest gray eyes moisten, and in answer to my suggestion that we would join in this universal prayer he responded, 'yes' with emphasis. The Spirit of the Lord came upon us; and as we prayed for his soul, for the recovery of his health and that his life might be spared until his work was done, at each petition he responded, 'Amen.' It was the hour of his surrender to God. That 'Amen' by that silent man was more significant than volumes by others. Thereafter it was his custom and habit to call to prayers."

Concerning the baptism of General Grant about which so much has been said, the bishop related this thrilling scene:

"On one of those delusive April days when hope revived in all our hearts, I said to him: 'You are a man of providence. God made you the instrument to save our nation, and He may have a great spiritual mission to accomplish by you and may raise you up.' In the most solemn and impressive manner, with a mind clear and a voice distinct, he replied, 'I do not wish to proclaim it; but should He spare my life it is my intention and resolve to throw all of my influence by my example in that direction.'

"It was in the early part of April, 1885, that I gave him baptism. Of late the disease had made rapid progress. Death seemed imminent. Even his physicians had given up hope. I had watched with him all night. At five in the morning the baptism took place. All supposed that the General was dying. Wrapped in his silk robe, with a worsted cap upon his head, the great soldier was reclining in a large arm-chair; his pulse was feeble, his brow cold, and an oppressive stillness prevailed. As I entered the sick-room Mrs. Grant said to me, 'Doctor, the General has not been baptized, and we wish you to baptize him now.' I consulted his sons, and to his wife and sons I replied: 'I will baptize him if he is conscious; I cannot baptize an unconscious man.' We all knelt down around his chair, and as I began to pray the General opened his eyes and looked steadily at me. As his physicians thought that he could not live five minutes longer, I prayed that God would receive his departing soul. But a grateful surprise awaited us. I then approached him, and spoke to him about his baptism, when he answered, 'I am obliged to you, doctor; I had intended to take that step myself.' In the meantime his son had brought in a silver bowl full of water, and with the General's expressed wish, I baptized the illustrious sufferer in the name of the 'Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.' He was fully conscious, and with his own hand wiped away the drops of water that had run down upon his face. A few days thereafter I spent two hours with the General in religious conversation. I asked him if he recalled the scene of his baptism, to which he replied: 'Yes, perfectly. And as you came into the room I wondered why they had called you at that hour of the night.' To my remark, 'All thought you had not five minutes to live,' he gave this characteristic answer: 'I knew I was very low, but I did not intend to die; my work is not done. Three times I have been raised from the valley and shadow of death.'

"And during four months thereafter he lived and suffered, revised his first volume, and wrote the second volume of that great monumental work which reflects his fine literary taste and the nobility of his character. In that conversation he said to me, 'I believe in the Holy Scriptures; who lives by them will be benefited thereby. Men may differ as to the interpretation, which is human; but the Scriptures are man's best guide.' He revered their source, recognized their influence, responded to their requisitions, trusted in their promises, found consolation in their hopes. His faith in God as the sovereign Ruler and Almighty Father was simple as a child's and mighty as a prophet's."

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

[Later on Miss Willard wrote Bishop Newman concerning a tablet upon which General Grant expressed his sentiments in regard to alcoholic stimulants. The following is the Bishop's kind reply.—EDS.]

DEAR FRIEND:—The tablet which General Grant wrote is in New York, but I can recall it with sufficient accuracy. One day, while on Mount McGregor, he was more depressed than usual, consequent on the terrible disease which brought him to his grave. Mrs. Grant suggested that perhaps a little wine would relieve him. He was then voiceless, and all his communications to us were on a small tablet, which was ever at hand, and he wrote this kind and emphatic reply:

"Alcoholic stimulants produce temporary relief, but leave me worse when the effect has passed away. I decline to take it.—U. S. Grant."

At my request he signed the answer, and I have preserved the precious temperance memorial.

Your friend,

JOHN P. NEWMAN.

A CRADLE SONG OF THE SOUL.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Miss Mary A. Lathbury has written the words and melody, and Mr. Theodore Seward has furnished the accompaniment to a lovely composition based on that hallowed home prayer of little children, "Now I lay me down to sleep." It is called "A Cradle Song of the Soul."

White-ribbon women represent the cause of home protection, and a song like this in their meetings and at their social entertainments would do much to deepen the sentiment that is to-day the strongest conserving voice of everything good in the Republic. I am so thoroughly convinced of this that I have asked our business manager, Mrs. Grow, to keep the song on hand at Headquarters, and I hope it will become a part of our "regular supplies." "A word to the Y's—and W's, too, on such a theme—is sufficient." FRANCES E. WILLARD.

ANOTHER HARVEY VICTORY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The brave fight which the temperance people of Harvey are making against the saloon is developing some new and important legal points which will be of great interest to the temperance world at large. Some weeks ago the fact was demonstrated that a single dose of certiorari was all that was necessary to put an end to the existence of an illegal saloon ordinance, a rather novel method of killing saloons before they could be born. But equally novel and more important was the injunction obtained on the 21st of November in the superior court of Cook county, which is founded upon the doctrine that a restrictive clause in deeds to real estate creates an equitable covenant between all purchasers of lots in a restricted subdivision and which can be enforced by means of injunction by any purchaser against any other purchaser.

After the certiorari victory which was widely noticed by the press, the temperance aldermen, rather too confident of their success, consented to the submission of the question of license at an informal election and agreed to abide by the result in the matter of passing a new license ordinance. In the absence of all legal restrictions the "wets" ran in a horde of illegal voters and repeaters and carried license by a small majority, notwithstanding the fact that the vote for mayor a few months previous showed that the anti-license voters outnumbered the license voters nearly two to one.

A license ordinance followed, and two saloons were opened. The temperance people were at first much disheartened, but have lately come to regard the opening of the saloons as a fortunate affair, as it has given them the opportunity of ascertaining the value of the prohibitory clause in their deeds, and of demonstrating that while, with the changing tides of political sentiment, aldermen may come and aldermen may go, prohibition, like Tennyson's brook, "goes on forever," so far, at least, as the restricted territory of the city of Harvey is concerned, for although its area consists of several square miles, there is but little unrestricted land within the city limits, and that is too remote from the center of population to be available as a location for saloons.

The injunction was obtained in this wise: October 17 Lucy Page Gaston and William L. Coryell, purchasers of lots in the original subdivision of Harvey represented by the prohibition attorneys, Packard & Miller, 1615 Ashland Block, Chicago, filed a bill asking for an injunction against Ella Moore, another purchaser in the subdivision, restraining her from allowing intoxicating liquors to be sold on her premises, and against Edward P. Bradley, restraining him from keeping a saloon thereon. The case was brought before Judge Brentano, of the superior court, and was referred to Hiram Barber, one of the ablest masters in chancery in Chicago. The defendants, as is the custom, were kindly taken under the sheltering wing of one of Chicago's largest breweries, who put its own attorneys, one of the strongest law firms in Chicago, in charge of the case. A hard fight, with numerous continuances, reaching over more than a month, resulted in a complete victory for the complainants, the master remarking, after giving his decision, that the case made by them was absolute and unquestionable. The temperance people, therefore, have no anxiety as to what is to follow in the nature of a motion to dissolve the injunction and appeal to the higher courts.

The only contention of any legal signification made by the defense was, that the conditions had changed and that there were lots not subject to the restrictive clause, intermingled with the restricted property, and that it would be inequitable to enforce the covenant. This was completely defeated by affidavits of T. W. Harvey, the founder of the city, and by various other persons who were connected with the Harvey Land Association during nearly all of its history, and by petitions showing that at least ninety per cent of the resident property owners in the original subdivision were in favor of the enforcement of the covenant.

An interesting item in connection with the case was, that one of the important cases relied on by the attorneys for the complainants was one in which this same doctrine of restrictive covenant was enforced by a brewer in compelling the defendant, who was also a brewer, to use complainant's beer, and no other, in a saloon which was being conducted by the defendant brewer, a clause to that effect having some time before been incorporated in the deed of one of defendant's predecessors in title, making the Harvey case a humorous instance of "poetic justice" and "hoisted with his own petard," etc.

The importance of this case to the temperance cause lies chiefly in the fact that the equitable doctrine invoked by complainants has never heretofore been utilized in this country in fighting the saloon, and it puts a new weapon in the hands of temperance people who live on restricted territory, sure and deadly against the almost ubiquitous arch-enemy of the home.

DEAR CO-WORKERS:—As promised last week we will continue the helpful conference touching methods that may be employed to revive the lagging enthusiasm of a local union.

In almost every letter that has come in response to our call for help has been the advice to "interest the pastors." The white ribbon work will always have a cheerful, brisk outlook when the church, through the hearty interest of the pulpit, bids it Godspeed and actively helps it speed!

---

Another reiterated bit of counsel is that Gospel meetings be held. These may be conducted in the church prayer-meeting room or in home parlors.

---

"Subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL." Yes,—for how can white-ribboners work unless they know and how can they know unless they have access to this source of white ribbon knowledge?

---

"Try bringing the county convention to your place, with good speakers, interesting your friends and acquaintances to entertain delegates."

That is a good plan. Have you read how Baltimore unions flourished after the National Convention?

An Ohio friend suggests a parliamentary drill as a good means of arousement. This sister also states: "One woman in our town was completely converted to Prohibition by reading 'Glimpses of Fifty Years.' The union in question should purchase it and pass it around or read from it at the meetings."

Other good books for such use are Miss Willard's "Do Everything," and "A Great Mother." Also "The Life and Labors of Mary A. Woodbridge."

This voice is from Kansas: "I believe our source of strength lies in consecration and an earnest desire to be faithful in the several departments our union may take up. If one superintendent does not or can not perform her duties another is sought and found who can. Non-reporting on the part of superintendents shows where weakness lies, and a wide-awake president should reinforce that spot. Do not rest on your own faithfulness alone. To get people interested in our movements put them, if possible, on a program in a mass-meeting. If you are poor go to some of these people who 'are just as much in favor of temperance as you are, but —,' and ask them to help bring a fine speaker to the town."

I think sometimes our unions scatter too much. A small union in a small town had better resolve on some one plan of aggressive work and hammer away on that one line until success is compelled. For instance, if you cannot secure definite results from your superintendents of departments call a conference, state the failure plainly, ask each one what special line of work she can do or wants to see done. Unite on one thing.

Perhaps there is a saloon that catches the boys and men on Saturday nights and sends them home drunk and penniless. Engage an empty room somewhere near the saloon. Beg a stove from some hardware merchant. Get hold of a good-natured carpenter, who, for his own boy's sake, will give you lumber and horses for tables. Others will help you out on chairs and lamps. Some poor woman will be glad to help you for a good basketful of food for herself and hungry children. Butcher and grocer will give you a discount when they know you "mean business" to help keep boys and men straight. Hire a boy, furnish him with a bell, and just when the shops are pouring out the victims for which the saloon lies in wait announce your Saturday Night Dinner. Be businesslike. Put a plain-reading bill of fare outside. Compel success. If they won't come the first time, or second, they will the third, just to see what "them wimmin are up to," and then by your delicious hot viands, your frank, friendly business dispatch and your low prices, you will completely capture them.

Why not invest in a coffee cart? Station it outside one of the big factories at noon, or at six in the evening, and sell good coffee at cost.

---

Or your work may resolve itself into a free kindergarten for the children, an industrial school for boys, a reading-room, a father's club, or some other needed work that the peculiar conditions of your locality alone can determine.

---

Only, remember this: Do not try to do too much, and do your chosen work with vim and conviction. "Strike while the iron is hot," I heard a preacher say, "or strike till it gets hot!"

And may our Lord prosper you in all things!

Mother Experience.

THE LITTLE MAID OF THREE.

BY A. O. GRUBB.

There was a little maid of three
  In cunning hood and pinafore;
Her every wish was law to me,
  And I was full six feet and more.

And always on a sunny day
  As down the garden paths we strayed,
A tiny lass would point the way
  She wished to go, and I obeyed.

And when sometimes the little feet
  Grew tired of walking by my side,
She raised to mine the brown eyes sweet
  And sought my shoulder for a ride.

Then, softly, while we passed along
  The pathways where the roses grew,
She chorused with her "sleepy song"
  The sweetest cradle song I knew.

One day my lassie came to me
  And by my side in beauty stood
The dainty little maid of three,
  Grown into glorious womanhood.

The years she lived, so bright they were!
  They brought no stain, nor sense of wrong,
And all the words we spoke to her
  Were sweet enough to weave in song.

One night I kissed the tender eyes
  And whispered: "Sweet, good-night to thee;"
At morn, out where the sun doth rise,
  My white-winged dove had flown from me.

To-day across the earth and sea,
  The soft winds breathe in monotone;
I miss my little maid of three
  And walk the garden paths alone.

In Two Chapters.

BY LILLIAN L. TROTT.

CHAPTER II.

"I do believe Sofe is ailing again; there hasn't been a sign of life about the premises for days."

"Some of us ought to go over. It won't do to let her lie there to die neglected, bad as she is."

"I would if I didn't have to go to the city. Where is Sewd? Send him in."

"Not Sewd, papa!" a small figure was suddenly alert, a white face quivering with feeling. "Don't send Sewd—anything but that! I—I'll go instead!" smothering a tremor.

"Nonsense, Clare. She can't eat him."

But Clare clung to him with a desperate "Don't! I don't dare have Sewd go."

Sewd came in just then and their voices were hushed. Francis Morai went himself, little imagining that the subject of their late discussion had heard it all and saw him depart with eyes in which wonder and shame were blended.

That evening he and Clare were in their favorite haunt, the garden.

"What are you to be when you're a man?" asked Clarence, as usual propounding a question to which Sewd had never given a thought.

Sewd rolled over to get a squarer look at the stars.

"Ten years, say; whatever I am in ten years I'll be in twenty, thirty. In ten years, then, I'll be—"

From the street came a chorus of inharmonious voices, jangling, wrangling. Ever and anon above the curses would rise a sacred refrain, sung by some ruffian in harsh discordance. They recognized Lorn's vernacular, and once Clarence heard Sewd's name.

"In ten years you think I'll be—that!" Sewd ejaculated.

"No, to be that you'd have to want to be bad, hard. If you got bad, 'twould be 'cause you were bewitched."

"That's so. Th' imps seem t' tech somethin' in me't gives back a note like strikin' th' keys of an organ. You know what one t' tech 'n' so does Lorn. It's magic, black art, or somethin' like."

Sewd did not add that generations of rowdyish ancestors had handed down to him this susceptibility. No wizard's wand was needed to touch a responsive chord.

"You might be a mechanic, now." Clare took up the thread where it had been broken, "you're handy with your fingers."

Sewd was busying himself with the stars again. They took him out of speculations into a world of certain purity. "I couldn't get time to learn th' trade. They have my wages t' home, you know."

Yes, Clarence knew. He didn't say so, though, and fell to quizzing the stars along with Sewd. Would it ever come right?

"I say," he began again, "whenever are you going to knock off tobacco?"

"Did I say?"

"You shall say. Tell me, Sewd, will you knock off to-night?"

"No, you know I won't."

"Now, Sewd! Yon know you will; give me your supplies 'n' say you'll never touch it again. That's the way they do when they turn over a new leaf."

Sewd chuckled. "If I turn one I'll do it in my own way."

"I know. Whatever it is you'll have your own ugly way about it. I don't care how you do it, only do it."

"Don't see why you should care what I do."

"I don't either, but I do. Shan't sleep a wink to-night if you don't set my mind at rest."

"Fudge! I say, Clare, why was it you wouldn't take what the doctor ordered t'other day?"

"Well," Clare changed color with the effort to strike a happy medium between an exaggeration of his own upright principles and the temptation to think Sewd would suspect him of overrating them for the sake of greater influence, "I s'pose if I'd been in danger I'd taken it—that is, if mother and father'd said I must. But he needn't think he's goin' t' poke his whisky into me every time I have a cold. Mother washed me off in saleratus water 'n' I come out 'f it all right, the feverishness. 'N' th' cold got well itself when it got ready without any of his help."

Sewd writhed in a spasm of merriment. "Soda water an offset for rum! Th' fellers call it a pretty mild substitute."

"Don't, Sewd; it hurts!" Clare was on the verge of tears and Sewd forbore. The tobacco question was dropped, but the ever watchful Clarence saw no evidence of its use for weeks after. One day there was wood to saw. This work above all other Sewd detested. At first it was not so bad, with Clare on the grass under the willows, to talk to. But by and by there were lessons to be learned and Clare went indoors. Then the lonely boy sawed till the society of his own thoughts became intolerable. From his upper window Clare saw him drop the saw and drop his own lonely body on a log. The self-appointed guardian felt his heartbeats quicken before the apparition! Sewd drew out a tiny bit of the delicious narcotic, tasted it with the tip of his tongue, inhaled deep draughts of its apparently aromatic perfume, gazed on it as though he would feast every sense, and with a sigh that Clare felt rather than saw, returned it to the sanctum whence it came. No more study for his friend that day. Two steps at a bound and he was at Sewd's side, congratulation in his eyes.

"Oh, come off!" was his rather rough reception, for his truthful eyes could never conceal the things they saw, "a fellow's got t' have some comp'ny. It's easier t' knock off with it in my pocket. Didn't know any buddy'd see me, though," shamefacedly.

"I'm glad I saw you. I'd never'd known you half so well. You keep yourself out of sight so, Sewd."

"Tell you what 'tis," answered the older boy, with a sudden frankness, "I've been with toughs so much 'n' know't everybuddy expects nothin' else 'f me 't I'm 'shamed t' show what I do feel."

. . . . . .

Three years later a boy of some seventeen years was walking through this same village at sunset. Past one house he hastened, though a fascination appeared to draw his glance to its windows again and again.

At length the die was cast. The home life had proved too repellant for Sewd's youth and ambition. The carousing pugilists who called him kin appropriated his earnings and thanked him with kicks and curses. As a natural outcome Lorn had won his consent to "run away to sea." He was come to-night for a last look at the home of the odd child that was more to him than his own brothers cared to be. Stealthily he crept back and forth in the shadows, thinking of Clare, of his strange freaks and his unswerving honor. A moment only, and that startling, thrilling whistle cut the air, severing Sewd from all connection with a past that was almost sacred in its associations. He followed the signal, and the vessel swung out from the harbor.

The next few years were black with shame. They booked for a long voyage, and touched at many a port. The sailors were of Lorn's stamp. They frequented the worst haunts, and Sewd, following, went in at every open door. At times he despised himself for his easily yielding nature, thinking how Clarence would scorn these men and their ways. Then he would give up to the magnetism of customs familiar to him since childhood.

One day there came an awakening. They were cruising in tropical waters, and landed at an English settlement in a south seaport.

"From home?—you're an American. What news?—you've been no more than one year out," said one homesick boy, accosting a sailor from a ship in the harbor.

The stranger was not from their native town, but had recently touched that port. Like others of his ilk, he knew but one family name. His news interested every man on board: "Old Aunt Sofe is dead!" Like a knell the words fell on all ears but Sewd's. To him they came as a message from Clare, and the child's purity touched him now as never before. He recalled the agonized little face when his father suggested sending "Sewd" to Sofe's. How could he have forgotten that terrified, "I don't dare have Sewd go!" In his wanderings a gypsy had told him he possessed "plenty reason, but no will." He had mocked her, laughingly, for a mind reader. Now he felt that the world, with the old woman, read it in his well meaning, irresolute face. Little did the fortune-teller, or any one else beside Clare, understand Sewd. Her saying, returning at this crisis, added fuel to his burning shame, and that night in the garden, when he would not renounce tobacco and Lorn! Why, oh, why had he not given his word? That once promised, he would have held to, through weal or woe. He threw himself on the grass and looked up to the stars. They seemed to beckon his lost soul. They were the same stars he and Clare had watched together of yore. Was Clare alone with them to-night under that northern sky? Lorn's voice, speaking to the stranger, reminded him of his query on that other night. "It's b'tween me 'n' th' little chap?" and the memory of his own broken sentences, "In ten years you think I'll be—that! Whatever I am in ten years I'll be in twenty, thirty." He sprang to his feet. There was still time. It had been between Lorn and "the little chap," and the little chap had won.

When he and Lorn were alone that night they talked as only two men who have sinned and suffered together can talk. Both were pained, but for Lorn it was the bitterest moment of his life, as it was for Sewd the gladdest. They were attached to each other as few wicked men are, but Sewd had conquered, and Lorn, while he stifled his sense of failure, ay, and of loss, almost rejoiced that the "little chap" had not failed. Years of vice had hardened him. Yet when he reviewed the past with Sewd he said he would live it differently if he could begin over again. If!

The first home-bound ship took Sewd before its mast.

"Let me take your glass. There is something familiar about that figure, despite its roll."

Clarence and a university friend were pulling about the harbor as was their wont during the holidays. Since Sewd's runaway escapade Clare had "taken to the water," as his father termed it, "expecting to fish him up on a bent pin." What his motive may have been he confided to no one, quietly haunting the wharves and boat houses till the tars had come to look for him on days when ships were expected from foreign ports.

"What are you up to?—back water! we'll be swamped."

"No, pull alongside; I mean to take that fellow off her."

"If he'll come."

"He will. Hullo, there, Sewd! Give me a rope."

With the alacrity with which Sewd had always catered to Clare's whims a rope's end was thrown over the vessel's side, and Clarence went up hand over hand.

. . . . . .

In a street brawl some one was wounded. With his little remaining breath he named a noted specialist, and a boy volunteered to call him, though men thought him beyond the aid of physician.

The great man placed a hand on his pulse and an ear over his heart and said, "He cannot rally. If his life had been different we might hope. He has no constitution."

A quiver of the features and the dying eyes opened. "I wanted t' see y' t' tell y' 't I'd better 've knocked off wh'n you did," Lorn murmured; "th' little chap wuz right. I'm glad now 't he won," and all was over.

WHITE RIBBONS.

BY MARY L. WYATT.

[Song. Old Tune.]

Oh, dear! what can the matter be,
Dear! dear! what can the matter be,
Oh, dear! what can the matter be?
Johnnie's so long at the fair.

He promised to buy us a bunch of white ribbons,
He promised to buy us a bunch of white ribbons,
He promised to buy us a bunch of white ribbons,
To tie on the badges we wear.

Oh! who'll bring us the ribbon white,
Pray, who'll bring us the ribbon white,
Oh! we must have the ribbon white,
To tie on our badges to-day.

(Tying Ribbons.)

We'll tie on our badges, our silver-bright badges,
We'll tie on our badges, our temperance badges,
We'll tie on our badges, our silver-bright badges,
With winsome white ribbon so pure.

THE DOOR TO THE HOUSE.

There were idle thoughts came in at the door,
And warmed their little toes.
And did more mischief about the house
Than any one living knows.

They scratched the tables and broke the chairs,
And soiled the floor and wall;
For a motto was written above the door,
"There's a welcome here for all."

When the master saw the mischief done,
He closed it with hope and fear,
And he wrote above, "Let none
Save good thoughts enter here."

And the good little thoughts came trooping in,
When he drove the others out;
They cleaned the walls and they swept the floor,
And sang as they moved about.

And last of all an angel came,
With a beautiful shining face,
And above the door he wrote, "Here
Love has found a dwelling place."

THE PUNCTUATION POINTS.

Six little marks from school are we,
Very important, all agree,
Filled to the brim with mystery,
Six little marks from school.

One little mark is round and small.
But where it stands the voice must fall,
At the close of a sentence, all
Place this little mark from school: .

One little mark, with gown a trailing,
Holds up the voice, and, never failing,
Tells you not to pause when hailing
This little mark from school: ,

If out of breath you chance to meet,
Two little dots, both round and neat,
Pause, and these tiny guardsmen greet—
These little marks from school :

When shorter pauses are your pleasure,
One trails his sword—takes half the measure.
Then speeds you on to seek new treasure:
This little mark from school: ;

One little mark, ear-shaped, implies,
"Keep up the voice—await replies;"
To gather information tries
This little mark from school: ?

One little mark, with an exclamation,
Presents itself to your observation,
And leaves the voice at an elevation,
This little mark from school: !

Six little marks! Be sure to heed us;
Carefully study, write and read us;
For you can never cease to need us,
Six little marks from school!

THE COURAGE OF THE PUGILIST vs. THAT OF THE PATRIOT.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Some years ago my home was often in that of a Southern family of distinction, in the best sense of that word, for it was made up of a noble father, a brave mother and pure-minded, vigorous children.

One morning when the father came down to breakfast, he saw on the cheek of his youngest son, a winsome little fellow of ten years, the marks of a wound, and said with anxiety:

"Charlie, how did this come about?"

Whereupon the little fellow answered:

"I was in the park yesterday and a boy skated towards me and when he was quite near flung a piece of putty at me with all his might and hurt me as you see."

The father's brow contracted and he said in a tone of indignation which did not represent his sober second thought:

"And what did you do to that miserable fellow?"

Charlie looked up with smiling eyes and fair, bright face and made an answer in his fresh, young voice that I cannot forget:

"Oh, papa, I just skated on."

A few months later, when the St. John temperance campaign was at its height, a swift express train carried Charlie and his mother from Mountain Lake Park to their Baltimore home. Boy-like he asked if he might walk through the train and "see the folks." His mother assented, and so he left the parlor car, returning in a few minutes with flushed face and boyish enthusiasm to make this report:

"Mother, what do you think they are doing in the car just ahead of us? Why, they are taking what they call 'a straw,' that is, a count to find out who was the candidate of each man for President. Blaine had ——, Cleveland had——, and only one man voted for St. John."

His mother, who was a devoted white-ribboner, then said with earnestness: "Charlie, I wish you would go back into that car, and give my thanks to that brave man 'who dared to stand alone.'"

At this the boy exclaimed with delight: "Mother, I was that man, and I voted to represent you."

It is a curious fact that the story of the boy who just "skated on" was written out by me and sent to one of the most famous children's papers in the world, which declined it with an explanation that "the boy did not show proper spirit." But from my point of view he was as much a hero in the first instance as in the last. He simply could not put himself on the level of one who slung putty and pounded with his fists, but on the plane of moral courage he was not afraid to differ from a whole carload of grown men who looked upon him as a foolish young fanatic.

Many a time in the heat of controversy or galling crossfire of sharp criticism, that boyish face has come before me, and I have seemed to hear the fresh, untroubled voice saying, "I just skated on."

BRIGHT SAYINGS OF CHILDREN.

BY E. P. ARMIN.

On looking out of the window one evening little May saw a star close to the moon; whereupon she exclaimed:

"O Tattie, the moon has a baby!"

This same little May said one day:

"I do not love God one bit."

Her elder sister was shocked at such a statement, and said: "Why, Mamie, you ought to love God."

"Well, why?"

"Why, because He made you."

This quieted May for only a moment, when she looked up with a knowing look on her little face and said:

"But I didn't want to be made, you know."

A little boy who loved big words came to his mother one day and said:

"I wish we had a refrigerator under our house."

"Why, my son?"

"Instead of stoves, to keep us warm, you know."

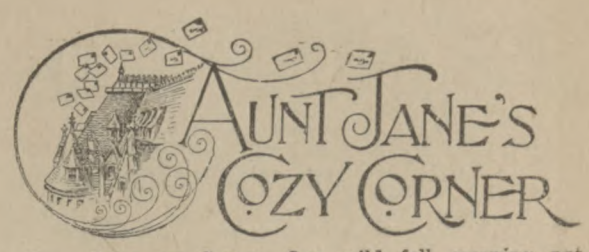
Of course every one laughed. He, looking very indignant, said:

"You need not all laugh so, I knew enough to say invigorator if I had wanted to."

Three little boys ask the blessing at the table when papa is away. One Sunday evening there was only a light supper and Lot was to ask the blessing. He looked over the table, then closed his eyes and said:

"God help us to be good." Rolling his eyes up to his mamma, he said:

"I thought I wouldn't ask God to bless our food as we haven't anything but crackers and milk!"



DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—One mild fall morning not long ago Chicago people took up their newspapers and read the telegram from the United States weather bureau saying, "Hoist the cold wave signal, the temperature will fall from 15 to 30 degrees."

It made everybody shiver just to think of it, and though the weather was warm enough out doors, many people began to prepare for that cold wave. Furnaces were put in order, coal was sent home, mufflers, leggings and warm clothing were brought to light, and in every way preparations were made to battle the giant King Frost when he should come upon us.

Especially did the seamen and those in charge of the exposed harbor get ready for the dangers of the storm and cold. Vessels were stripped and put in safe anchorage. Many tugs were kept busy piloting boats to safety. The signals were got ready and the whistles were blown at a lively rate by captains who wanted to get into port in good season before the storm came that they might not be caught in a place of danger.

Just a little message over the wire was the cause of all this activity. There was no immediate sign of the coming cold in the big city on the lake and the regions round about, and anybody who judged only by the weather of that warm fall day would say, "What's this I hear about a cold wave coming? I don't believe it. At least not while the weather is like this."

But the thoughtful ones had more faith. They knew that the men in the signal service office had a wide view over the whole country; that by their charts and maps, and the little ticking telegraph machine, they can follow and predict the course of storms and know just what conditions will call one into being.

And it came. The north wind blew; the sleet and snow froze fast to tree limbs, weighed down wires in a dangerous fashion and covered every object with beautiful white crystals, making the whole world look like fairyland.

Those who had prepared for the cold were ready, all comfortably housed and clothed. They could enjoy the scene. But those who were not ready, who had not heeded the warning were so miserable and suffering they could not enjoy anything. Pity the poor sailors far out on the stormy water, nearly frozen by the cold blasts, whose captains had not sought the shelter of the harbor! Pity the poor children everywhere who had not been provided for.

Among which would you rather be, those who were ready or those who were not ready? There is no doubt, I know. And the secret of being ready was in heeding the warning, was it not?

There are other warnings that come to every one They'll come to you through life. May every Cozy Cornerer be keen and alert to obey them himself and pass the word on to others.

Then you will have all the joy and comfort of a well-ordered life safely sheltered from all "cold waves" in the harbor of the Father's secure and perfect love.

Affectionately your

Aunt Jane

THE W. C. T. U. NOT SECTARIAN, BUT FRATERNAL.

The Boston W. C. T. U. has seen fit to send a protest to our National President, Miss Frances E. Willard, in regard to fraternizing with Catholics. The full text of both the protest and Miss Willard's reply are given below. We are glad to learn that this is not the unanimous action or opinion of the Boston union, and we are informed that two of the four who were appointed to draw up the protest declined to serve, and that it is signed by the secretary simply in her official capacity, and does not carry her vote.

A PROTEST FROM THE BOSTON W. C. T. U.

To our beloved National President, Miss Frances E. Willard:

Your sisters of the Boston W. C. T. U. have learned with deep sorrow of the attitude taken by yourself and others at the National Convention held in Baltimore, toward those whom we view as enemies of our nation, and do thus protest: While we recognize the breadth and wisdom of fraternizing with all who may honestly desire to abolish the saloon, and do away with the drink habit, yet we view with alarm the inroads which Romanists are making in our ranks, preventing freedom of speech and action, and we believe great care should be taken, lest they do serious undermining work.

We do also protest against allowing Roman Catholic priests to take part in our religious exercises at conventions, and call your attention to the fact that many of the delegates were indignant that a Roman Catholic priest was asked and did pronounce a benediction at Baltimore. We further beg that you in your investigations which cover so wide a scope, will look into the doings of the Jesuits, especially at Washington. After a thorough and candid investigation, we believe that you will be convinced that our action as a National body must be exceedingly guarded toward this most dangerous class in our community.

In justice to the Massachusetts delegation we ask that this protest be printed in THE UNION SIGNAL.

Signed,

MARY E. CHENEY,
Secy. Boston W. C. T. U.

Miss Willard's Reply.

To my Beloved Sisters of the Boston Woman's Christian Temperance Union:

Your protest was duly received, and as you addressed it specifically to me, I will endeavor to reply in the same terms of affection and respect that have characterized our intercourse for more than twenty years and will, I feel sure, to the end. Let me, however, remind you that the resolution against which you protest was adopted in our Convention of more than four hundred regularly elected delegates, by a practically unanimous vote. That resolution stands in the report under the head of "Fraternal Relations," and is as follows:

"Resolved, That Catholic women and Hebrew women should be invited to send fraternal delegates from their annual conventions to ours, and to establish branches of the white ribbon society within their own borders."

As a matter of course, fraternal delegates have no voice or vote in any convention save as they bring greetings and words of encouragement from the societies they represent.

I cannot imagine to what you refer when you "view with alarm the inroads which Romanists make in our ranks, preventing freedom of speech and action." It is my observation that Catholic women are being organized into separate societies affiliated to the Catholic Total Abstinence Association, and that this is being done, not only to secure their help, but to prevent their becoming members of the W. C. T. U. In a movement so untrammeled, fearless and outspoken as ours, it is impossible to see the force of the accusation that "Romanists are . . . preventing freedom of speech and action."

You also protest against "allowing Roman Catholic priests to take part in our religious exercises" and mention that "many of the delegates were indignant that a Roman Catholic priest was asked and did pronounce the benediction at Baltimore."

Let me remind you that as far back as 1886, at the Centennial Temperance Congress in Philadelphia, called by Rev. Dr. Daniel Dorchester, of Boston, Father Cleary (now president of the National Catholic Total Abstinence Association) pronounced the benediction in presence of scores of Protestant ministers, and there was no protest, nor was any criticism of this token of interdenominational goodwill made by the religious press. In 1891 Father Cleary was with us in Tremont Temple, Boston, as a fraternal delegate, where he made an inspiring speech, which was warmly received, and on one occasion pronounced the benediction, it being my custom as president to ask any minister or any white-ribbon woman accustomed to do so thus to dismiss the audience at the close of each session.

At our National and World's Convention in Chicago at the World's Fair, Archbishop Ireland was on the platform while a Bible reading was given by Mrs. Barney of Rhode Island, at the close of which he pronounced the benediction. In Baltimore a parish priest welcomed us in the name of Cardinal Gibbons, who was absent from the city, and Rev. A. P. Doyle, of New York, secretary of the Catholic Total Abstinence Association, addressed us as a fraternal delegate, and the priest who accompanied him pronounced the benediction.

This is the sum total of participation on the part of Catholics in our conventions, except that Mrs. Leonora Barry-Lake, one of the few Catholic women who have joined our society, has spoken at perhaps three of our conventions, where she has always been received with the utmost cordiality and has delighted us by her eloquence and devotion.

Not one word of protest from any of our ten thousand local unions has ever been made until now, and I freely admit that if any one must be called to account for these manifestations of appreciation between two of the most influential temperance societies of the Republic, you have directed your protest where it belongs, for I am responsible in the sight of God and man. The facts are that so far from seeking to do the "undermining" work with which your protest charges the Catholics, no member of that communion has ever sought, so far as I can learn, to gain any influence whatever in the W. C. T. U.

The first movement in that direction was made by me, in August, 1891, when, having learned by the daily papers, that the Catholic Total Abstinence Association was to meet in Washington, I invited our lamented Miss Julia Ames (then assistant editor of THE UNION SIGNAL) to accompany me and we went to Washington and appeared before that society as fraternal delegates from the National W. C. T. U. As it was the especial duty of the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. to seek fraternal relations with philanthropic and religious societies in order to spread the influence of the temperance and purity movement as widely as possible among them, and to gain from them knowledge and coöperation, I naturally enough regarded it as my prerogative to go upon this mission of good will. We were cordially received, and at my suggestion, a woman was made one of the vice-presidents of the Catholic Total Abstinence Association, which had never before placed the name of a woman on the list of its officers. From that day to this our two societies have interchanged fraternal delegates, or fraternal official messages, at every annual meeting.

This is, in brief, a history of our relations with our Catholic brethren and sisters. By this record I am willing to be judged, and by it I expect to stand or fall. As a patriot I am proud to fraternize with a temperance society of Catholics that will hiss a Catholic senator who defends the Tammany ring and applaud a Protestant police commissioner who denounces that bulwark of municipal brutality. This, as you know, is what occurred in New York city at the last annual meeting of the Catholic Total Abstinence Association. A more loyal action, in which men rose above the ecclesiastical prejudices of centuries and remembered only that they were citizens does not adorn the pages of our national history.

Let it be remembered that the W. C. T. U. is not a church; it is a Temperance union; it has no creed, but it has a declaration of principles; it stands for total abstinence, total prohibition and "a white life for two"; and among its rally cries are these: "No sectarianism in religion, no sectionalism in politics, no sex in citizenship."

Its motto is, "For God and Home and Native Land," and it proclaims not only in this, but in every nation, that only the gospel of the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the gladness of the Golden Age of Man. If Catholic or Protestant, Jew or Gentile will come to us as fraternal message bearers or as working allies upon this sacred platform, let us not only clasp their friendly hands, but go more than half way to welcome them to the broad outlook and blessed fellowship of a union that has the home for its center, harmony for its watchword and the happiness of all for its heaven-appointed goal.

In this faith and purpose I am,

Your loyal comrade and co-worker,

Frances E. Willard

En Route Lexington, Ky., Nov. 23, 1895.

THE BOSTON PROTEST.

The doctrine of "states rights" has always found an exponent in the organization and workings of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. "Agreement upon essentials; liberty of conscience and action upon nonessentials," has been its dominant policy from the beginning; while the widest latitude in defining what shall constitute essentials is allowed.

Yet patent as is this fact to white-ribboners we are constantly finding it necessary to repeat, in one or another form, that the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union claims no voice in shaping the policy of a state or local auxiliary. The wide range of our work is open to all, but no especial line of that work is made obligatory upon any. To sign the total abstinence pledge and pay the annual fee are the sole conditions of membership in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

This being so, it certainly is not strange that differences of opinion should sometimes arise within such very elastic walls. Our women are thinking women, and two hundred thousand brains represent at least the possibility of two hundred thousand widely divergent views upon all minor matters. It is hardly to be supposed that the proceedings of any annual convention have met the views of all our vast constituency, therefore, although we do not now recall that any other convention has called forth a protest like the one received from the Boston union, we yet most cheerfully concede to that and all other unions the right of such protest, since the right to make itself heard belongs to each minority, while in all majorities is vested the supreme right—a kind of noblesse oblige of hearing and heeding the minority, though it be composed of one member only.

Yet in conceding this we are nevertheless brought face to face with the obverse side of the proposition which is that majorities also have rights which minorities are bound to respect, and that when the will of the majority has crystallized into a definite act, as in the case in point, the minority is bound to passively acquiesce in, though it may not actively indorse, that will. In other words, the time for a minority to make itself heard is when the battle is on; not after its result has been declared.

So much for the protest per se; now for its subject matter. It is given in full in another column and it will there be seen that its chief objective points are the general alarm "felt at the inroads Catholics are making in our ranks, preventing freedom of speech and action," and the specific protest against Roman Catholic priests taking part in the "religious exercises of a National W. C. T. U. Convention."

Both points as represented in the Baltimore Convention have been so judicially answered by Miss Willard herself, that we need not enter into that part of the discussion. We wish to consider the matter in the abstract rather than the concrete and to find, if possible, what such a protest, coming in the last days of the nineteenth century, really means.

Without question many thoughtful minds find much to deplore in the principles and policy of the Roman Catholic church, but it is equally without question that no thoughtful mind can fail to find in that church much of the vital truth which all Christians hold in common. Wherever it seems to us to be in error it is clearly apparent that, even from the Protestant standpoint, its error is simply a mistaken application of truth, and may not the same be said, in a greater or lesser degree, of all churches and all organizations, everywhere?

The only way to eliminate evil is to recognize existing good, and to so cultivate it that it may bring forth more good. Therefore, the Boston protest seems to us wholly out of harmony alike with the spirit of the age and the spirit of the W. C. T. U.

With the spirit of the age because men are everywhere learning that the polemic epoch of theological thought is past. The days when to denounce error was counted the only way to advance truth, are gone past recall. Without doubt that stage of thought was a necessary one, but it is equally without doubt that we of the present are to be congratulated that it is of the past. It has been as truly left behind by the process of a higher evolution as have the scientific theories and methods of that same past. To-day we overcome wrong-thinking by the simple manifestation of right-thinking. We have come to see that light, not anathemas, not blows, is the divinely appointed means for overcoming darkness, and we know that light can neither be hurled at, nor shoveled into a darkness; all that it needs is a center from which to radiate, and verily the darkness will take to itself wings. We believe mankind are saying to each other to-day as never before: "Show me your best;—best thought, best hope, best solution for life's problem." And if our best is better than that which another has been holding as best, it is founded upon the eternal verities that that which is really BEST shall dominate. To question this seems to us to be but to doubt the omnipotence of truth.

That this protest is out of harmony with the spirit of the W. C. T. U. is a self-evident proposition. One of our foundation principles, as shown forth in our name, is "union." What right have we to exclude Catholic women, or women of any other church, who sign the total abstinence pledge and pay the membership fee, from coming into that union? Many, indeed, regret that the resolution in question was ever passed, fearing lest it may be construed to confine Catholic and Jewish women to fraternal relations only, when the rights of full membership are extended to all who are of one mind with us upon questions of reform.

"No sectarianism in religion; no sectionalism in politics; no sex in citizenship" has long been one of our most stirring battle-cries. It seems strange indeed that the first definite protest against unsectarianism should have come from that city so noted for breadth of thought and latitude of doctrine.

We are well aware, however, that it is against the Roman Catholic church in civil government rather than in religious thought or experience, that this protest is aimed, but it is just here that we fail entirely to see its import as connected with the W. C. T. U. We are not a church, neither are we in any sense a government. We are simply a company of women, drawn together by the fact that our eyes have been anointed to see certain wrongs and our ears have heard the Divine voice calling to us, "Up and right those wrongs." Why should we not welcome as allies those to whom has come a like vision and who have heard the same voice? The Catholic Total Abstinence Society is a valuable ally in this work to which we are called, a fellow comrade in our "peaceful war for God and Home and Native Land." We certainly do not intend to repeat the mistake of past ages, and turn our guns against our friends when they should be leveled straight upon the foe.

The thought that Catholic members have "prevented freedom of speech in our conventions" is so new a one that it must well "give us pause." Just where the Baltimore Convention exhibited a lack of that freedom it is difficult to see. Possibly the trouble lies in varying definitions as to what constitutes freedom of speech. If by "freedom of speech" is meant the wholesale denunciation which the Catholic church meets in some quarters to-day, then we sincerely trust that if the W. C. T. U. has not enough of Christian courtesy to refrain from such denunciation in the absence of Catholics, they may continue, by their presence, to make such indulgence impossible.

As to the "participation in religious exercises," we cannot understand the feeling which would refuse to be prayed for—a benediction is only a prayer—by any lips, though we might count them worthy or unworthy. The prayer is addressed to God, and the devout heart of the listener turns to God, whatever the human medium. From Him alone can come the blessing.

Indeed, it seems to us that to exclude Roman Catholic priests from participation in the exercises of conventions —where they are never present in large numbers—must argue one of two things, it is either religious intolerance or moral cowardice. If we are afraid of our own truth—afraid that it cannot stand the test of truth—then we may well shrink back from having it brought into contact with anything which presents a diverse view of truth; but, if we are strong in our own faith, sure that God has given to us higher light, why should we fear, no matter with what that light is brought into contact?

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see" —not your zeal for doctrine and your power in polemics —but "your good works." Only thus can men be brought to "glorify your Father which is in heaven." And, lest we fear that in this spirit of charity the essentials of our faith be overlooked, let us remember that "Love is the fulfilling of the law," and that it is promised, "If in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you."

DR. SUDDUTH ADDED TO THE LIST OF W. C. T. U. LECTURERS.

Dr. W. X. Sudduth has been appointed National lecturer in the department of narcotics. The cause of temperance is to be congratulated, for Dr. Sudduth comes not only well prepared as a scientist, but with his heart in the work. He is a living embodiment of the influence of heredity. His late father was a staunch opponent of the drink habit, and his mother and sisters are well known to white-ribboners, particularly Margaret Sudduth, who is now enjoying a year's vacation from editorial work on THE UNION SIGNAL. Dr. Sudduth was one of the founders of the Law Enforcement League of Minneapolis, Minn., that by its operations carried consternation into the saloon-keeper's and brewer's camps. As chairman of the "agitation committee" he kept the question of law enforcement constantly before the people, and later on, as president of the League, he did most aggressive work. However, Dr. Sudduth believes that prevention is better than cure and works from that standpoint also.

Realizing that the extent of the use of narcotics and their full effects are only known to specialists in the treatment of inebriety, he has prepared a series of lectures on what he calls drug habits, in which he discusses such questions as the relation of heredity to inebriety, the scientific steps (not saloon steps) that lead to the habit; alcoholic, opium, morphine, tobacco, cocaine, ether, chloral, and other forms of inebriety. But as scientific terminology is unintelligible only to the few, he avoids its use as far as possible, and seeks to simplify and popularize his subjects so as to bring them within the grasp of all. In this he succeeds admirably.

Dr. Sudduth comes into the field not only thoroughly informed upon the scientific aspects of the question, but well trained in lecture methods, having spoken extensively as a popular lecturer on scientific subjects since about 1885, lecturing in Philadelphia, and in the universities of Iowa, California and Minnesota, and has spent several years abroad in post-graduate studies. His lantern lectures are especially entertaining and instructive, and, although more expensive, unions need not be deterred from having even them, as the doctor goes for the love of the cause, and asks only that expenses be paid. It ought to be said, however, that his lectures will have to be confined mainly to Illinois and adjacent states, as his professional work in Chicago will not admit of extended trips.

NEW LAW POINTS FOR PROHIBITION TOWNS.

Our friends living in towns having in their deeds to real estate a restrictive clause against the existence of saloons, will be greatly interested in the article on the Harvey victory as found in our correspondence columns. There are several points in this case which are well worth emphasis.

It appears that the town council of Harvey was suspected of irregular procedure in the matter of licensing saloons, and that by a writ of certiorari, which simply means "to be made more certain," they were compelled to bring the records into court for inspection. It was thereby shown that the action licensing saloons was taken at a meeting called to pass a special ordinance on water works, and not for ordinances, and was therefore illegal. So far as we know this is the first time that such a writ has been granted to find out whether a council proceeded legally or not in the matter of licensing saloons. The point to be remembered is that town councils can be compelled to bring their records into court for examination.

Later on, and after a popular vote in favor of license, secured by fraud it is claimed, the temperance people determined to proceed against the owner of property on which a saloon had been opened. The result is eminently satisfactory. The mutual covenant entered into by the Harvey Land Association and the purchasers of lots, to the effect that saloons could not be established thereon, was held to be binding. The second fact of importance is, therefore, the binding force of such covenants. It is believed on good authority that the rulings in this case cannot be overthrown by the higher courts.

Another point of interest is that any property owner can bring suit for violation of the mutual agreement, as it will be noted that in this case other property owners proceeded against the one allowing liquor to be sold on her premises, as well as against the keeper of the saloon. A bit of grim humor is brought out by the fact that the temperance people strengthened their case by turning the brewers' own engine of war against the whisky side, even as Hamlet did the sealed letters against his schoolfellows and "blew them at the moon."

THE Peace Association of Friends reminds us that the Pan-American Congress, the British Parliament and six of the smaller European nations have declared for arbitration, and that England and France have both asked for arbitration treaties with the United States, while the Venezuela difficulty, the Nicaragua, Armenian and Hawaiian questions are all suggestive of war.

There is no field of Christian effort offering greater opportunities for usefulness than the Deaconesses work."

Three hundred and fifty-four members of the British Parliament have asked the United States government to formulate a treaty for England and the United States, to bind these two nations for twenty-five years to settle all disputes by arbitration. On the 9th of July the French Parliament passed a resolution asking for an arbitration treaty between France and the United States, unlimited as to time of duration. Hence, it means to bind these two nations for all time to settle their disputes by arbitration. This is the most advanced step any government has taken.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA W. C. T. U. IN CONVENTION AT QUEBEC.

"Quebec, the Beautiful," as Miss Willard called it in her sympathetic letter of greeting, Quebec with its Old World air, Quebec teeming with historic and romantic associations, Quebec of the citadel and terrace and breakneck steps, Quebec with its medieval walls, Quebec of magnificent views and gates of stone, and "Quebec the Quaint," as our American friends love to call it, was the scene of the eighth annual convention of the Dominion W. C. T. U.

Perhaps it was well that Quebec saw fit to draw a veil over some of its charms during convention, else it would have required superhuman virtue on the part of the delegates to resist the temptation to stray from the halls of the Y. M. C. A., where the sessions were held and where the wisdom and hospitality of the committee of management provided a toothsome lunch daily.

Mrs. Todd, the acting president, filled a difficult position with tact and a warm-hearted sympathy which won for her the appreciation of all, for who could forget that the last convention was presided over by that loved leader, Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, who, "being dead yet speaketh," and whose bright face, admirably portrayed, hung above the president's chair, and seemed to infuse a spirit of harmony and a broader purpose of achievement in all present. Mr. Williams, with rare unselfishness, came from Montreal to visit the convention, and tell how as far back as last winter his wife had begun to prepare for this convention, and how he had found notes in her Bible which showed she had chosen as a text for the keynote of the convention, "Seekest thou great things for thyself? Seek them not." At her last convention, the one held in London, she had closed her annual address with a quotation, which was so suggestive of her own aim in life and her purpose for this union that he would again leave it with them:

> "A sacred burden is this life ye bear;
> Look on it, lift it, bear it solemnly;
> Stand up and walk beneath it steadfastly;
> Fail not for sorrow; falter not for sin,
> But onward, upward, till the goal ye win."

To attempt to give even a short résumé of the thirty-five reports submitted to the convention, would require more space than could be given even to this important gathering. Suffice it to say, all were listened to with close attention, interesting discussion following many. That on "Peace and Arbitration" provoked some remarks questioning the desirability of fostering the military spirit which exists in boys' brigades. Mrs. Woodbury, president of Nova Scotia, spoke strongly in favor of the movement. It was a great feeder for the Sunday-school, for no boy could become a member of the brigade unless he was a member of a Sunday-school in good standing. He must also sign the pledge. Here Mr. Williams was asked for his opinion as having been a boy once himself. Mr. Williams replied that the ladies feared the war spirit much more than they need. It was in us all. It was in the apostles, it was in the whole Bible. It was born in the boy "unbeknownst to him," as "Samantha" had said. It should not then be ignored, but be recognized and guided aright. The surest way to peace and arbitration was for us to be able to defend our rights at the point of the sword, if need be. Another lady thought the habits of obedience formed, of strict discipline enforced, more than compensated for any tendency to the military spirit.

Mrs. Moodie of Montreal, showed that good work had been done in the coffee house department, valuable testimony having been given by frequenters.

Miss Dougall of Montreal, stated that a vigorous crusade had been waged against granting licenses to grocers with some success. She also hoped the time would come when churches would refuse to accept aid from men who made their money in the liquor traffic.

The franchise movement has gone forward, noticeably in Ontario and the Maritime Provinces.

Miss Tilley, corresponding secretary, reported that there were now 422 local unions in the Dominion, with an active membership of 9,676 and an honorary membership of 1,288. There were 185 Bands of Hope with a membership of 13,486.

Mrs. Tilton, the treasurer, reported a balance of $681 on the right side.

The cigarette evil was presented by Mrs. Wright, of London, many counties preparing to take active steps towards anti-tobacco legislation. Mrs. Thornley read a petition to be presented to the Dominion Parliament, asking that the manufacture, importation and sale of cigarettes containing opium be prohibited, and that the enforcement of this law be provided for by proper inspection and penalty for infringement. The extent of the cigarette evil was, Mrs. Thornley said, assuming terrible proportions. The manager of the Newsboys' Home in London, showed her recently a photograph of a group of twenty-five boys then in the home, every one of whom was a "cigarette fiend." The rules of the home prohibited smoking, yet those boys would in the depths of winter, get up in the middle of the night, steal downstairs and stand outside barefooted and in their nightclothes to smoke.

On Saturday afternoon Mrs. Gordon urged the extreme importance of the evangelical department. To depend on other branches of work without this was like depending on a rope of sand.

Mrs. Jennie Fowler Willing, newly appointed by the World's W. C. T. U. as superintendent of evangelistic training schools, spoke both in convention, and on Sunday afternoon and Monday evening, and gave a detailed account of her work.

As a result of her pleading the plan of work committee recommended the adoption of her work as a new department, to which consent was given.

Miss Scott, editor and proprietor of the Woman's Journal, reported increased circulation for this, the official organ of the union.

Quebec is a city, conservative among conservatives, and it was a matter of much congratulation that the evening meetings were so well attended by the citizens, and it was looked upon almost as a miracle when an editorial eulogistic of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union appeared in one of its papers which heretofore had studiously refrained from recognizing the existence of such a society.

On Friday evening the meeting was held in the Methodist church, whose pastor, the Rev. Mr. Manson, said he brought the greetings of one thousand seven hundred Methodist ministers, all teetotalers; he represented a body of churches stretching from ocean to ocean, not one of whom would tolerate as its pastor a man who "quaffed his glass."

On Sunday afternoon Mrs. Willing was introduced by the Rev. Mr. Love, of St. Andrews church, as the first woman who had ever spoken from its platform even, and on Monday evening Chalmers church opened its pulpit (not for the first time) to the convention, its pastor, the Rev. Donald Tait, being in full sympathy with the movement, having preached the morning previous on the aims of the society, and giving it his hearty approval.

During the convention several ministers were introduced. Mr. Bruneau, of the French Protestant church, gave sympathetic greeting, and the Rev. Mr. Noble, of the English church, raised a laugh by saying that while in sympathy with the union in every other branch of work, he took exception to their stand on the franchise question. "You are not alone there," the president assured him. "No, indeed," remarked a delegate from New Brunswick in an audible aside, "every saloon-keeper in the country is with you."

The election of office bearers was a matter of earnest consideration, and satisfaction was felt when Mrs. A. O. Rutherford, of Toronto, who has faithfully served the union for years in the capacity of recording secretary, was elected president by a more than three-fourths vote. The other officers are: Vice-president-at-large, Dr. Amelia Yeomans, of Winnipeg; corresponding secretary, Miss Tilley, of Toronto; treasurer, Mrs. Tilton, of Ottawa; recording secretary, Mrs. R. W. McLachlan, of Montreal.

It was learned with much regret that Mrs. Todd's removal to Boston would deprive Canada, for a time, at least, of a most efficient and valued worker.

During convention a school of methods was conducted by Mrs. Thornley, of London, followed by a parliamentary drill full of fun, in which the W. C. T. U. decided to create a department for the suppression of snoring, to which end they gave an order for several machines adapted to that purpose. The question box was next opened and gave rise to some amicable divergence of opinion. One of the benefits of these gatherings consists in bringing out the thoughts of minds trained under varying conditions of life. It is astonishing what chameleon colors a subject will assume looked at from different points of view.

Reference only can be made to Mrs. Armitage, of Sherbrooke, and her gracious readiness to use her sweet voice so freely in the service of song, to Mrs. Bascom's Bible reading on the Holy Spirit, to Mrs. Distin's original talk on Ruth, and to the convention prayer-meeting, led by Mrs. Todd.

The last evening was devoted in part to a short, bright, memorial service in honor of Mrs. Williams, the late president. Reference was also made to the death of Mrs. Faucett, a former Dominion president. Five minute addresses by the provincial presidents rather took the audience by storm, so bright and full of interest were they.

A round of applause greeted the announcement that the prize banner for the greatest increase in membership was this year won by the Northwest Territories, a province not yet fully organized, but which had added one hundred and ten per cent to its numbers during the past year.

Much of this increase is due to the efforts of Miss Lilian Phelps, who during the spring made a lecturing tour through the Northwest Territories and British Columbia.

Then followed an experience expression of "Why I joined the W. C. T. U.," which was provocative of much laughter and with an undercurrent of serious attention.

The convention closed with all the white-ribboners rising, forming a complete circle round the room and singing "God be with you till we meet again." After adjournment the convention went in a body, by invitation, to the House of Parliament, where they completely filled the speaker's gallery.

THE UNION SIGNAL sympathizes deeply with our brother, T. R. Carskadon and his wife, of Keyser, West Virginia, in the loss of their son Harry, aged twenty-two, a model young man and thorough Prohibitionist. He never tasted tobacco or strong drink, and he was a loyal member of the guild of "A White Life for Two."

THE Portage county, Ohio, semi-annual convention of the W. C. T. U. met in Atwater, November 7. Eleven of the thirteen unions in the county were represented by delegates. Reports from superintendents show lively interest in the work of different departments. They have more than doubled their number of unions in the county within the last four years, and are hoping to continue the good work.

DECEMBER 9 is Physical Culture Department Day in the Atlanta Woman's Congresses. Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent, has charge of the session, and will deliver an address on "Physical Education in our Public Schools." Miss Clara G. Baer, of New Orleans, one of the department associates, will speak on "Physical Education in the Women's Colleges of the Country." Other features will add to the interest of the occasion.

JOSEPH COOK has had a severe illness in Melbourne, Australia, though at latest accounts he was mending and it was expected that he would soon go on to join Mrs. Cook in Japan. "All people who on earth do dwell" with a purpose here to help set up the kingdom of heaven will pray that the golden trumpet of this Christian hero, who seems so right on every issue of applied Christianity may long "set the echoes flying" for pure homes and perfect Christian citizenship.

OUR NATIONAL REPRESENTATIVE BEFORE THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

The General Assembly of the Knights of Labor has held a session in Washington within the last month. It is the supreme body of that great organization and is composed of some eighty delegates who represent the hundreds of thousands of men and women who form the great organization known as the Knights of Labor. This stately assembly is a grand court of appeal for all the points of difference and troublesome questions that arise in the subordinate lodges.

Mrs. Annie F. Beiler, of this city, who is the National superintendent of the department of Christian Citizenship, was summoned by Miss Willard to represent her before this body. Accordingly Mrs. Beiler appeared before the General Assembly with greetings and resolutions. She was accompanied by Mrs. La Fetra, who is the World's superintendent of the same department.

As the ladies entered, the entire assembly arose to their feet and remained standing during the ceremony of introduction. Mrs. Beiler spoke without notes and her remarks were followed with close attention by the members who frequently applauded, especially when she spoke the name of the president of the N. W. C. T. U.

Her address was to the following purport: "Brothers:—I am commissioned to bring you fraternal greetings from the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States of America. I bring you cordial greetings from our chieftain, Dr. Frances E. Willard, and her co-laborers. I come representing the largest society of the nineteenth century, composed of women, and conducted entirely by them—women of all classes and conditions, every one of whom are your friends, and who recognize the fact that you represent the brain and brawn of our great Republic."

After reciting our declaration of principles and our motto Mrs. Beiler continued: "In these, the sunset hours of the nineteenth century, we are glad that labor is considered honorable. Labor has ever been an equal inheritance of the world's citizens, which word, citizen, is a common noun. There is no sex in labor. There should be no sex in citizenship. In France women are elected delegates to conciliatory conferences. Perhaps we might help you. Women have been ever noted for their ability to straighten out tangles. The W. C. T. U. would be glad if you would indorse 'Sunday closing of all drinking places,' 'one equal standard of purity for both men and women,' 'equal pay for equal work,' 'the enfranchising of women' and 'the prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating drinks.'"

Hearty applause followed the close of the speech as well as the good-natured reference so wittingly made to the ability of women to straighten tangles.

The reply of General Master Workman Sovereign was lengthy and feelingly delivered. In part he said: "I thank you for your courtesy and greeting. You have given us repeated proof of your sympathy for the cause of labor. On behalf of the general assembly I assure you that your visit is but another expression of the oft repeated statement that we have on the outside of the order more warm and cordial supporters than on the inside. It is a pleasure to this general assembly and to the order in general, to know that the great president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a member of the Knights of Labor. We spend more time and money and talent to the upbuilding of women than any other organization on earth. We go down into the sweaters' dens, into crowded garrets, musty cellars and decaying tenement houses. We are organizing our assemblies of women wage workers to give them better conditions and to elevate them in moral standing. We counsel our members to temperance, frugality, industry and sobriety. We do not take the same high ground that you do and stand for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, but we do draw the line at the saloon-keeper, the brewer, the gambling house and the haunts of shame. There is not a professional bartender among the Knights of Labor."

A motion was made and carried to place the remarks upon the minutes, and the visitors took their leave.

Our National union is to be congratulated upon its possession at the national Capitol of a woman of cosmopolitan views and acknowledged ability, as is its superintendent of the department of Christian citizenship.

A later action of the General Assembly seems to the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia as something like a backward step, yet the claim for the action is that it is prompted by feelings of humanity. The times are and have been such that every trade and calling but one has suffered. The liquor business is running at full blast, and now and then a man belonging to the Knights of Labor has taken his place behind the bar as a salesman. Such men, unable to secure other employment, are not to be expelled, but retained in the ranks.

Hon. Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, has already begun upon the work assigned him by the last congress when it appointed a "commission to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic." After years of unavailing solicitation and numerous petitions a Democratic congress appointed the much desired commission. For years the senate has declared in its favor, but the

MONTANA.

THE YEAR'S SUMMING UP.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Montana union was held in Anaconda, a beautiful little city of about five thousand inhabitants. It is a place well worth visiting at any time, as its smelter works are the largest in the world, and a trip through them full of intense interest to even the uninitiated.

Huge smoke stacks, large enough to drive a dray through, with plenty of room for the driver, run up the mountain side, and stand in brick and mortar majesty upon every hill-top. These carry the smoke far above the town except upon rare occasions, when it descends, and Anaconda people must choke and sneeze until the wind sees fit to change.

It was at this town that an enthusiastic delegation of white-ribboners from all parts of the state, arrived on the afternoon of October 4. We were met at the train by the reception committee of the Anaconda W. C. T. U., and each delegate felt at once that she was more than welcome.

A reception was tendered the convention that evening at the home of Mrs. McKenzie, at which a number of honorary members were present, wearing the white ribbon and giving hearty words of greeting and encouragement.

The convention was held in the Presbyterian church, which was beautifully decorated with flowers, mottoes and banners.

A cordial welcome was given us on Saturday evening, by the mayor, the clergy, the press and others, responded to by Mrs. Price, of Helena, and Mrs. Waters, of Bozeman, followed by the annual address of our president, Mrs. Wylie.

Sunday was a real feast day, with an immense mass-meeting at the Auditorium in the evening where we listened to good music and a brilliant address from our former president, Mrs. Cummins.

Monday was full of business. All the officers were reëlected except the treasurer: Mrs. W. W. Wylie, of Bozeman, president; Mrs. Price, Helena, recording secretary; Mrs. Taylor, Bozeman, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Kellogg, of Helena, treasurer.

Some of the reports were very encouraging, notably the flower mission and jail and evangelistic reports. Several new unions have been organized and some dead ones resurrected, but not as much was accomplished in this line as we had hoped for.

It was resolved to bend every energy during the coming year to the organization of Y's and to the extension of our press department. This vast infant commonwealth of ours, the population of which does not exceed that of the single city of Cleveland, Ohio, and scattered about in small towns, often hundreds of miles apart, renders the work of the white ribbon union almost superhuman if it is to keep itself alive and active to a telling degree. We feel that we have accomplished something the past year, and are determined to make the coming year a red letter page in our history if consecration to the cause and a more united effort can make it so.

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

OUR DUTY TO THE MEN AND WOMEN OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

A letter comes to my desk to-day from a faithful local superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, a lady in Pennsylvania, who says: "The teaching in our schools of this branch (physiology and hygiene, including special instruction as to the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics) during the past year since the revised physiologies were introduced is bringing forth good fruit, and will continue to do so. One of our plain Dutch neighbors, whom no one ever suspected of having thought upon the matter, astonished every one by going to the polls on the 5th and voting the Prohibition ticket. I inquired into the matter and found that his son had been studying the Blaisdell physiologies, and having told his father some of the facts contained therein, the latter listened and was converted."

Just this sort of quiet but powerful influence for intelligent sobriety is being exerted all over our land in the forty-six states and territories under temperance educational laws, wherever the local workers persistently push, for and secure for their schools the four essentials for the enforcement of these laws. These essentials are:

1. Endorsed text-books adapted to grade in the hands of all pupils using text-books in such other studies as geography or arithmetic, with oral lessons in the case of pupils unable to read.

2. A definite time and place in the course of study for regular class room work in this branch.

3. The same examinations or tests for promotion in this as in other studies.

4. The interested teacher.

Where the first three conditions exist, we get the last—the interested teacher—for the teachers of this country are ready to do their part for this study when the school authorities so put it into their course of study that it becomes a part of their regular work.

Have you, reader of THE UNION SIGNAL, secured these four essentials for the schools in your vicinity or are you bemoaning the absence of temperance sentiment in your place while you do not know whether the right temperance physiologies, or any at all, are in the hands of the pupils in your schools, or whether there is an adequate place in the course of study for this branch, or whether the teachers have the School Physiology Journal to show them how to teach it?

The abominations of the alcoholic drink system of our country are the result of generations of wrong ideas about the nature of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics. To reform this drink system these wrong ideas must be corrected by specific and universal education as to the truth about these substances, by just such education as the laws of almost the entire country now demand shall be given to the children in our public schools, by such education as the children are getting when the temperance people are far-sighted enough to demand each in his or her own city or town these four essentials. Do you say thisis difficult work which you do not understand?

The co-workers' letter and circulars to which it refers, called "The Local Superintendents' Outfit," full of suggestions drawn from the successful efforts of others and just the information you need, will show you how to take each step and meet every emergency. Send to us, address below, and get them, price only fifteen cents, and first study them carefully yourself. You will know then, how to begin, and knowing, begin at once and be as persistent as gravitation, looking unto God for wisdom and all needed help. Know no defeat till every child in your public schools is getting the warning knowledge concerning the danger of beginning the use of these character destroying, death dealing substances, which is their legal right.

This is your duty to the men and women of the twentieth century who are to-day in the schools in your own community.

While the beautiful chimes of the National Convention are still ringing in my brain, I think of the faithful women who remained at home, praying and sustaining the cause in our absence; for it is to the faithful "stay-at-homes" that as much or more honor is due, as to us who were giving the reports of what they had accomplished. Don't forget to mention The Union Signal when writing to advertisers.

UNION SIGNAL—and every one should—I bring to you a wish that you may have received the same spiritual uplift that we enjoyed in Baltimore, which shall insure greater personal blessings and bring a richer harvest at our ingathering next fall. We cannot remain inactive and attain progress.

Neither can we wait until the year nearly closes before putting our desires into execution, so I entreat the women of each local union at this early date to arise, go forward and hold parlor meetings. I understand our Chieftain, Miss Willard, wishes us to make much of the specials this year. Now, parlor meetings are specials and some of them are very special, especially when we only invite the elite of our cities and villages, that they may grow in knowledge of our grand sisterhood, and having obtained this acquaintance, will long to be included among the nobility of woman's organizations.

We must not be too exclusive—as I sometimes fear many of us are disposed to be—in letting the work, demands and purposes of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union come to the forefront that they may be better advanced. Modesty is to be commended; but do not let it abound to the detriment of our cause.

It is essential that we should have our programs carefully prepared, bringing forward our departments, for wherever these meetings have been properly arranged, the persons attending them have admitted with frankness that they were astonished at the magnitude of our work, and they had no idea that we had such clever, intelligent women among us. Let your lights shine, dear women, that the darkness may be expelled, and the scales having fallen from the eyes of our friends, they may be induced to unite with us.

Keep an accurate account of each parlor meeting, (not prayer and business meetings) which is designed to be instructive and social in its nature; of members and honoraries gained, and whether an interest in our work was manifested by the guests. Do not forget your question-box, pledge-book and white ribbon.

Send your reports at the close of the year to your county superintendent which she will forward to the state superintendent. I do regret that each state has not this much needed worker, but where such a vacancy exists, send me a letter where work has been done, and I will send you sometime in June, the questions I desire answered—which should be returned the last of August. I sincerely hope every county superintendent will require the reports to be returned to her by the 15th of August, that the state superintendent may receive them by the first of September. A few of the states who have done excellent work are omitted in the National report, because they came too late, which fact must be deeply regretted.

Iowa appointed a superintendent at the annual meeting, and I am thankful that my request has been granted. Hope other states will "go and do likewise." I hope to prepare a leaflet during the year that may be read at these socials.

Persevere in this department more than you ever have done. Expect much and you will receive an abundance.

My prayers for you and myself are, that we may have more of God's truth in our work and in our lives.

Yours for service,

MARY D. TOMLINSON, Nat. Supt.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE DEPARTMENT.

NEW SABBATH LEAFLETS.

Ten new Sabbath observance leaflets will be ready on or near December 1, and we think we have never presented a more valuable and timely set. They are by some of our strongest writers and touch vital points. We hope every union will help circulate them as rapidly as possible.

No. 73, "How to Keep the Sabbath" is for responsive use by Endeavorers, Leaguers, etc., especially by Juniors, and by Sabbath-schools and Loyal Legions. 74, "The Sabbath in Civil Law," by William Allen Butler, LL.D., and 70 "National Sunday Rest," by S. R. Coffin, should be read by every voter and thinker. 75, "A Personal Liberty Nut," we ask you especially to put into the hands of all who object to Sunday laws. 76, "The Sabbath in Social Life," by Mrs. Earle and Alice Woodbridge, is designed especially for society ladies and touches on domestic matters. Will you not put it where it was designed to go? Mrs. Cox, our new associate superintendent, has two excellent leaflets, 71, on "Street Cars," and 72, "The Children." No. 68, "Sabbath Hymns," for public meetings, by Ostrom, Joseph Cook, etc. 69, "Sabbath Department Work," and 77, "Remember," complete the ten. The last has a message to every one.

The three last named and No. 70 are ten cents per hundred, the others fifteen cents. Catalogues and schedules of work free. If planning to circulate, send a dime and get forty-five selected samples from which to choose, or a two cent stamp for ten new ones and a new catalogue, or thirty cents (reduced price) for superintendents' outfit. The Manual is reduced to twenty cents to close out this edition, and is free with each dollar order when desired. Every order should include a copy of Annual Report with suggestions for the year. It will help enthuse the workers. One cent each when with other orders.

Being detained from the National Convention by illness, I wish through this report, to reach you all with my message of cheer.

The Sabbath is becoming a political question as well as a moral one, and the non-churchgoers must be educated. Let us meet our responsibilities promptly and thoroughly, and help save the Sabbath. Begin before the holidays and reach one class, another in midwinter, and in April work along all lines.

Address for all Sabbath literature,

MRS. J. C. BATEHAM.

Williamsburg, Ky.

Cor. Secy's Notes

The National Union counts itself fortunate in having secured the services of Mrs. Marion B. Baxter to carry forward the financial plan suggested by Miss Willard at the last Convention. Mrs. Baxter has agreed to give one month, with the privilege of extending to three if satisfactory to all, to this work. It will in no wise interfere with her lecturing and organizing work, nor with the financial work of the states into which she goes. The plan is simply to present auxiliary membership in regular meetings, with the hope that there may be those who may be induced to come into this relationship with our work. We bespeak for Mrs. Baxter a warm welcome.

Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, who has severed her official relationship with the organization, is by no means out of work. She has been confined by ill health and family cares for the past year, but she is carrying on most excellent local work in distributing literature among lumbermen and other classes in far-off Washington. She sends every week some literature to the Soldiers' Home, and in various other ways such as are known to so consecrated a soul, helps in the furtherance of our principles. We hope white-ribboners on the Pacific Slope will note this, and if they have literature to spare, send to Mrs. Reese, at Chautauqua, Washington.

Mrs. O. E. Stambaugh, of Dauphin's Island, near Mobile, Ala., is also carrying on a very good work. Mrs. Stambaugh has been for years a white ribbon worker in Iowa, and on her removal to the South, began at once in a very needy field. She not only distributes literature but clothing and other necessary articles to the poor, and is carrying on a little mission with very excellent results. Help of any kind will be most gratefully received, and well applied.

My notes this week seem to resolve themselves into personals. Indeed, the whole work is getting more and more to resolve itself into that as I know the workers better, and I cannot close without speaking of the vision within the veil which came to me a few days ago as I sat by the bedside of Mrs. S. M. I. Henry. If one had ever doubted the realities of a future life, one look into her eyes which have caught the glow of the world beyond would dispel that doubt. She is waiting in triumph the summons to "go up higher." Meantime, she is holding the beloved work close to her heart, and is praying without ceasing. Words of remembrance from those with whom she has worked so long will be doubly precious to her now. I am sure all white-ribboners will not fail to ask not only a special blessing upon her, but that her mantle may fall upon some other, and thus the great work go on.

Next week I will speak of the offer for L. T. L., and various other matters of specific work. The battle presses sore, but the victory is more than ever assured.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner

Ohio and Wisconsin treasurers have already sent in dues for the new year. The former sends monthly, the latter quarterly. If our states cannot come up to Ohio they can surely reach Wisconsin's plane, and send dues in four times a year. The National treasurer remits to the superintendents quarterly, and it is imperative that the dues reach her that she may make this remittance.

MISS NATIONAL W. C. T. U'S DOWRY.

You all read (of course) the editorial of November 21, "A Consuelo Dot for the W. C. T. U." You will be interested to know that the idea came from Mrs. Fry, the managing editor, and was immediately responded to practically by Miss Anna Gordon, an old-time friend of the young lady, who laid down one dollar to start Miss National's dower. This has already been increased by several dollars, and the following letter from one of her admirers, an Ohio educator and author, shows in what high esteem she is held:

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

DEAR SISTERS:—Reading THE UNION SIGNAL this evening, with delight, as I always do, I saw the notice about endowing Miss W. C. T. U., as she is now twenty-one. I have loved this noble young woman since her babyhood, and my love for her increases with her years. I enclose a new dollar to put with Anna Gordon's to start an endowment for the W. C. T. U., so dear to us all.

Yours for God and home and every land,

FRANK V. IRISH.

The originator of the plan, sending her gift says: "Here is a dollar for Miss National, may she never be in want:

"'Want is a bitter and a hateful good,
Because its virtues are not understood.'"

SUSANNA M. D. FRY.

Other dollars for the endowment have been received from Margaret T. W. Merrill, Ella M. Thacher, Mrs. L. M. Kenyon, Mrs. Thomas Lash, Sarah Bryan Leete. Mrs. Leete quotes Miss Gordon: "Start it along, and let the world see that this maiden of wonderful prospects is worth something."

Who else will be glad to assist in placing the National W. C. T. U. on an independent, substantial footing, that our great work may be no longer handicapped for lack of funds, but may be broadened east, west, north and south, new lines extended, and old and well tried plans improved. One dollar from each friend and adherent is little, but from many is much.

THE BIBLE READING for December is by Mrs. Anna M. Vail. Subject, "Scriptural Architecture." Our readers do not need to be told that this will be found a most helpful and instructive reading. It treats of (1) The Foundation, and (2) the Superstructure. The former, points out the writer, is the "Solid Rock" and is something we cannot manufacture for ourselves; it is already made for us—given to each to build upon. For the superstructure, we as builders are personally responsible. We must "take heed" how we build thereon. We must co-operate with the Master Builder. Price one copy per year, 12 cents; ten copies to one address, $1.

SKEPTICISM ASSAILED; THE STRONGHOLD OF INFIDELITY OVERTURNED. By Britton H. Tabor.

Here we have a large work whose title is the least attractive portion, since it does not adequately set forth the wholly interesting and beautifully illustrated contents. The work is a well-written "story of the Bible," interspersed with such notes and comments and quotations from eminent authors as, says Charles H. Parkhurst in his introduction, "will prove a revelation to very many who have been exceedingly anxious lest the foundations of their faith should be undermined, and who will be surprised at the unassailable basis of reason for their most cherished faith in Christ."

BEAUTIES OF SHAKSPEARE. Compiled by the Rev. William Dodd, LL.D.

Standing between the complete works of Shakspeare and mere isolated extracts of familiar or proverbial passages, these carefully mined treasures illuminating almost every phase of human nature and human thought, give a large proportion of Shakspeare's dramatic work with no special stress laid on the dramatic setting. There are a few dialogues included, but for the most part the poetic beauty of any passage is its sufficient excuse for being selected. These "Beauties" are appropriately designated for here Shakspeare is at his poetic best. The text has been carefully compared with that of the Globe edition, many additional passages have been interpolated.

The book contains biographies of twenty-three men who spent their lives in self-sacrificing efforts for the enlightenment of benighted races. Such heroes as Bishop Patteson, the martyr of Malanesia, Griffith John, missionary to Turkey, Bishop Thoburn of India, Bishop Crowther of the Niger, Joseph Hardy of Neesima, John Williams, the martyr of Polynesia, Adoniram Judson, Bishop Taylor, Robert Moffat, Marcus Whitman, most romantic of all pioneers, Bishop Hannington of Eastern Africa, and David Livingstone the great explorer. Written with enthusiasm and a vivid style, the young reader will assuredly find himself in perfect accord with Dr. Clark in praise of this stimulating and inspiring book.

THE UNION SIGNAL is able to offer, for a limited period, its friends and subscribers an unusual opportunity of obtaining a truly SUPERB PICTURE, a reproduction of one of the greatest paintings of modern or ancient times, Munkacsy's "Christ Before Pilate," for which its present owner paid over $100,000. This wonderful picture covers over seven square feet of surface, is in fourteen oil colors, and reproduces in a marvelously exact manner the facial expressions of the characters portrayed in the great original. The publishers of THE UNION SIGNAL cannot commend too highly this splendid picture, which is 28x40 inches in size.

It has been commended in strong terms by Daniel Huntington, Esq., ex-president National Academy of Design, New York, and other artists, also by some of the most prominent clergy of this country.

It will be sent also to all subscribers who will send one year's subscription in advance of expiration of present subscription and $1 additional.

To Avoid Delay. When the secretary of a union sends in the name of the superintendent of literature she should be careful to state whether this is the first superintendent of literature the union has had or if the former superintendent (giving her name) has resigned and the new one been elected in her stead.

usually—education, development, and growth. But it hasn't been so with Pearline. Pearline's success has been a wonder, from the start. All the more so when you consider the many poor imitations of it, which claim to make washing easy.

These things tend to confuse people, of course. They're forced on the public by peddlers, prizes, substitution, etc. No doubt they're often thought to be the same as Pearline. We protest. Don't judge Pearline by the company it has to keep. 471

FACTS from the Labor Bureau concerning strikes have been issued in the new bimonthly bulletin authorized by Congress. The report covers thirteen and one-half years, to January, 1894. The loss to the 3,714,406 employés thrown out of employment during this time from strikes and lockouts amounted to $190,493,382. To offset this vast loss, the assistance given by labor organizations amounted only to $13,438,704. Outside assistance was also given, the amount of which is unascertainable.

THE Westminster Licensing Reform Committee has made the following interesting statement in a communication to the First Lord of the treasury: "The divergence in the views of the several sections of temperance advocates, so far from meriting reproach, we deem to be but the result of the efforts of differently constituted minds to grasp a confessedly intricate subject. It proves the intense desire which converges from all quarters for the removal of the evils that all alike deplore." Mr. Balfour, in acknowledging receipt of the letter, intimated that the question would receive the consideration of the British government.

A GIRL about twelve years of age was given a list of words with definitions, and was directed to form sentences containing those words. She did so with evident satisfaction as to the correct use of them. The following are a part of them: Instigate—to urge forward. "The man instigated his horse, so that his daughter would not miss the train." Extricate—to set free. "The slaves in the South were extricated." Expiate—to atone for. "The people in olden times used to expiate for sins." Debilitate—to weaken. "Some teachers debilitate the mental frame." Substantiate—to prove. "The teacher substantiated where the wad came from." Satiate—to satisfy. "The pupil was satiated with his seat."

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The National Reform Convention meets in Baltimore, December 12 and 13.

The pope has condemned the idea of religious congresses at the next Paris exposition.

A state senatorial committee is examining municipal affairs in Philadelphia and Pittsburg.

Louis Felipe Carbo, of the New Ecuador government, is studying American institutions with a view to the introduction of the public school system in his country.

The retail druggists' association of Chicago denounce the proposition of the city council to levy an annual liquor license of two hundred and fifty dollars upon them.

The prudential committee of the American board of foreign missions has forwarded a request to Miss Clara Barton of the Red Cross Society, to undertake relief work in Turkey.

Encouraged by the surprising success of the school savings banks already started, the New York city board of education has decided to provide for their institution in the public schools.

Fearing death at the hand of the Sultan, whose anger he had aroused by declining the office of grand vizier, Said Pasha, president of the Turkish council of state, sought refuge in the British embassy.

The American Federation of Labor convened at New York December 9. Mrs. Anna F. Beiler, National superintendent of the department of Christian citizenship, represented the W. C. T. U. as fraternal delegate.

PRESIDENT DIAZ, of Mexico, has at last issued his mandate against bull fights, and they will hereafter be forbidden throughout the provinces of our sister republic at the South.

HERE is practical proof of the "inspiration" of our great annual meeting. Mrs. Robinson, president of the Baltimore W. C. T. U., writes that six new unions have been organized since the National Convention with several hundred members and that they have over six hundred dollars left in the treasury after the expenses of the Convention.

THE appointment of a committee to formulate plans for political action during the coming campaign year was left by the executive committee to the general officers. Said committee consists of the general officers, the National superintendent of legislation and enforcement of law, Mrs. M. B. Ellis, of New Jersey, and Mrs. Mary E. Metzgar, of Moline, Ill., who made the original motion. Each of the great political nominating conventions will be petitioned to place Christian temperance principles in their platforms, and other plans will be projected as the work develops.

A RECENT letter from Lady Henry Somerset has this passage: "I have just come from sitting next to Khama, the Bechuanaland Chief, at lunch. There is a pathetic dignity about him very beautiful to see. It seemed sad that Babel should have made it impossible for us to talk, and that our dull intellects had no way of projecting thought. I could only hope he knew how intensely sympathetic I felt." Lady Henry, representing the British Women's Temperance Association and the United Kingdom Alliance, spoke in Queen's Hall, London, November 21, at the farewell meeting given in honor of King Khama the day before he sailed for his home in Africa.

IT is a fact of special interest in connection with the prominence to which Theodore Roosevelt has attained by reason of his fearless fulfillment of his oath as an enforcer of the law, that in a magazine article of a few years ago he gave his experience as a legislator, when seeking to secure the passage of certain reform bills. He therein stated that he and his colleagues investigated with care the character of their fellow members of the legislature, with a view to finding out how many they could depend upon to resist efforts at bribery. The conclusion they reached was that fully sixty per cent of the legislators could not be relied on. Comment is unnecessary. "Boss" Platt is still at the helm. He and "Boss" Quay will nominate the next president, and millions of "Christian voters" will set the seal of their citizenship to the combination next November.

THE President's message has not proved to be a "taking" document even among those of his own political faith. The consensus of opinion seems to be that Mr. Cleveland can use twenty thousand words to say less than any other man living. The message confines itself to two questions only, foreign relations and national finances, two-thirds of it being devoted to the latter subject. Its foreign policy is generally regarded as lacking in the proverbial American independence and vigor, and has produced widespread dissatisfaction. As to the financial problem the President can hardly be expected to admit, as protectionists think he should do, that the deficiency in revenue (about one million dollars per week) is due to "democratic tinkering" with the tariff. The cause of the distressing financial condition of this country lies deeper than the question of tariff or "free silver," or the kind of circulating medium in use, though it is hardly likely that the Fifty-fourth Congress will probe deeper than bonds and bank notes and treasury notes and greenbacks in seeking said cause and in applying remedies for relief.

MISS AGNES SLACK, secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., is holding meetings on behalf of the society in Dublin, Ireland. It has been well said by one of our leaders that "Miss Slack is an out and out temperance reformer, and takes vivid interest in all social movements." Also that she is "eloquent, clear, varied and the mistress of a pure and—what is not always forthcoming—grammatical method of speech." It will be remembered that our president and Lady Henry Somerset visited Ireland last spring and held great meetings in Dublin. Miss Helen Hood also went to Ireland some months before on a tour of reconnoissance. It seems a thousand pities that the bonny island should have remained so long outside the home-like fold of the white ribbon, and we feel sure that the efforts already made will be so intelligently followed up by Miss Slack that we shall ere long be able to announce the beginning of a new National auxiliary.

IT is strictly in line with its "Do-everything policy," that the W. C. T. U. should endeavor to enlist the aid of statutory law in the reformation of the drunkard. The proposed "Habitual Drunkards' Act," which is brought to the attention of our readers in the editorial entitled, "The Drunkard Takes His Turn," is a measure looking both toward the protection of society and the reformation of the drunkard. As long as the state permits drunkard-making to flourish it will have to protect itself and society from the dangerous product of the business; it will have to undo, as far as possible, its own work by restraining and detaining the inebriate. And as the detention provided for by the proposed legislation is more in accordance with scientific and ethical teachings than the plan of fine or imprisonment, we trust that unions all over the country will set about securing such legislation in their respective states as shall provide for the detention of inebriates in industrial homes. This is a work that is eminently practical. It has in it the elements of both moral and legal suasion without being "political," a feature that should commend it to our more conservative friends both inside and outside the white ribbon organization.

THE National W. C. T. U., at the Baltimore Convention, voted not to participate in the Anti-Saloon convention soon to be held in Washington. D. C. It did this most regretfully, but remembering the National Temperance League of Dr. Dorchester, the Anti-Saloon convention headed by Senator Windom, the anti-saloon movement of Albert Griffin of Kansas, and that all these turned out to be methods of holding the Christian vote of this country to the Republican party during the presidential campaign, the W. C. T. U. can but regard this latest "non-partisan" move as another snare set for the "white-ribbon bird." As the editorial comment on this convention in last week's issue has been interpreted as favoring a movement to which the National union has refused indorsement, it may be well to say here that THE UNION SIGNAL merely took cognizance of the fact t' any effort which is truly anti-saloon is an "advance ovement." Every "foe of the saloon" will "indorse" the measure to which the Washington convention is avowedly pledged—the "suppression of the saloon as an institution." But the W. C. T. U. goes farther than this. Its aim is the suppression not merely of the saloon, but of the entire liquor traffic. Of course, as the paragraph referred to intimates, the liquor power will not feel particularly concerned about this Anti-Saloon convention, for it does not fear any immediate danger to its interests from any movement that stops short of political action. Therefore, while we wish that good may come of this "no doubt wise and well directed effort" we steadfastly believe the W. C. T. U. is called to a more fearless and radical defense of the faith that is within us.

THE CHRISTMAS SONG.

BY JULIA MILLS DUNN.

"Peace, peace on earth, good will to men,"
The angels sang at Bethlehem;

Down through the dim and countless years,
Sweeter than song of bard's or seer's,

Echoes the sweet and solemn strain,
"Peace, peace on earth, good will to men."

Sing, heart of mine, its simple creed
That teaches love in word and deed,

Sing, sing anew the stirring strain—
The music of its sweet refrain,

Sing with the spirit of the song,
And still let love the lay prolong,

Till all the land from sea to sea
Is bright with love and liberty!

Sing its sweet messages of peace
To far-off lands beyond the seas;

Sing till our worn-out formal creeds
Blossom anew with kindly deeds;

Till all the stars shall sing again,
As once they sang on Bethlehem's plain,

"Now peace on earth, good will to men, Glory to God! Amen, amen!"

Moline, Ill.

THE LITTLE CHRISTMAS TREE.

BY MARY T. BUTTS.

"What a pretty, cozy old place this is! I am sure Mrs. McAlpine isn't altogether cantankerous or she wouldn't be such a lover of flowers. Why, her roses and heliotropes were the finest in the neighborhood last summer." Grace Chester was the speaker, and her cousin, Ann McCarty, replied:

"It's a great pity that Jennie couldn't have got along with her. But the aunt was overbearing and the niece was impatient."

"Well, Jennie has a chance to practice patience where she is now," said Grace. "The life of a sewing girl in the city must be a hard one."

Grace and Ann had been to the woods for Christmas greens. On their way back they passed Mrs. McAlpine's comfortable homestead. The front door was fast locked and the little front yard was heaped up with dazzling snowdrifts. The green shades were drawn down in the parlor, and a mountain ash by the window tapped upon the glass as if asking admittance for some wayfarer.

Mrs. McAlpine tried to believe that she didn't believe in Christmas doings. But who can escape the Christmas influence?

The old lady seated at her kitchen window braiding a rag rug, caught sight of Grace and Ann as they walked down the smooth, shining road, their wreaths and branches of greenery trailing behind them. Suddenly she felt a keen sense of her solitariness. Memory showed her a vivid picture of herself in the old home woods gathering sprays of "Creeping Jinny" and clusters of ground pine, and branches of prickly holly to decorate the little wood-colored school house for the Christmas exhibition. Her good, steady, affectionate brother John was always her companion and helper in those days. Poor John! He went away to fight for his country and never came back. His wife did not long survive him, and little Jennie was left to Aunt Jane's care and mothering. She had loved the child after her fashion, but she had not made her happy. It seemed as if John were asking her at this season of love and remembrance, "Where is my little girl?"

"I wonder if she would not like a pair of mittens," thought Aunt Jane. "Not that I mean 'em for a Christmas present—I don't believe in such nonsense—but they'd be good an' warm, an' save her gloves. I've got some o' that fine black yarn that I spun myself. I'll begin 'em right off. She might's well have 'em when other folks are foolin' with presents. Pity some o' the money that's spent on jimcracks couldn't be sent to the heathen. Children are just ruined with so many toys and so much coddling in these days."

Nevertheless, as Mrs. McAlpine worked away at the mittens for Jennie's slender hands she could not help thinking of past Christmases when the little one was kept at her usual tasks all through the glad holiday time, when the little stocking, hung in trusting faith at the chimney side, was left unfilled.

"A child's a child," reflected Mrs. McAlpine. "P'r'aps she wasn't so much to blame for not liking me. I have to coax my geraniums an' begonias to make 'em bloom, an' I guess human feelin's is somethin' like 'em. An' I remember John used to be different from the rest of us. He'd bring home little presents to us on our birthdays, an' he was a great hand to bring wild flowers when he come in from the fields and woods. The rest of us never let on that we was pleased at such things, but we missed 'em when he was gone. Poor John! I always thought he was glad of an excuse to get away from home when the war broke out."

So Mrs. McAlpine knit away at the Christmas mittens and thought of the old times, and of John and "the little girl." And sometimes as she sat alone, the truth pressed sorrowfully near her consciousness. Though she might try to shut her ears, the still, small voice made itself heard:

"Love is the best of life,
Love is life."

It was all because of Christmas, this unwonted state of things in Mrs. McAlpine's staid and practical household. Christmas hints of the spirit's needs and of the new life that Christ came to inaugurate.

Jennie in the city working at Christmas gowns, could not escape the new atmosphere. Do what she would she could not keep Aunt Jane out of her mind. She had left home in a very rebellious state, thinking as she bade Aunt Jane good-by that she never wished to see her again. But her heart grew softer and softer as the glad holiday approached. Whenever she saw a happy family group trooping through the streets, or standing at the store windows, or coming out of some brilliant bazar, their arms full of Christmas gifts, the longing for home and home love grew almost too strong for endurance.

At last she sat down, full of a Christmas plan, and wrote a double letter to Grace Chester and Ann McCarty. From that moment she began to grow happier. She, too, had a part in preparing for the dear world festival. She haunted the bargain counters, poked around in second-hand book stores, examined soft wool wraps and hoods, and every spare moment found her busy with crochet needle or scissors, or paper and paste, busy and contented, for loving work builds a barrier that discontent can neither climb over nor get through. The lonely little seamstress felt herself as much a part of Christmas as the rich young ladies who came to try on their gowns, chattering meanwhile of the great charity fair, for which they were spending money and time and work. How little they guessed of the sweet thoughts nestling at the plain, unnoticed workgirl's heart!

In the meantime, the short December days passed rapidly by. Even Mrs. McAlpine found none too much time for all that she wished to do. Deep down in her heart, not even recognized as a wish, a thought suggested:

"Perhaps somebody may happen along about Christmas time. There's John's wife's cousin, Penelope Reed; she come here one year jest at the holidays. I didn't treat her very well, 'tis true. I thought she was after a dinner an' nothin' else. But mebbe I was mistaken. Mebbe she was lonesome an' wanted to do somethin' jest a little different at Christmas, so's to have it to think about. P'r'aps I'm a little hard on folks. I shouldn't wonder if I am. Anyway, I'll get some neck an' heart when Mr. McCarty kills his beef critter, an' make a few mince pies. Them gnurly apples off the old tree at the back door'll answer well enough, an' they ain't worth nothin' for winter. How Jennie used to nibble at the sour, hard things! I must see if any of the girls are going up to town shoppin' an' get 'em to take the mittens along. It won't make a bit o' difference, a mitten's a mitten, but I've sort o' set my heart on Jennie's gettin' 'em 'bout Christmas."

Mrs. McAlpine made the mince pies and a loaf of plum cake, besides a great pan of doughnuts. She thought of Jennie very often while she was concocting these good things.

"Perhaps somebody will come," she kept saying to herself, "Penelope, or somebody."

So the days wore on and Christmas eve came around once more. Not a neighbor had entered the McAlpine house during the entire week. Everybody had been busy at home. Neither had word come by letter from any quarter.

"Well, it's no wonder," said Aunt Jane. "I thought mebbe somebody'd write, but it's no wonder they haven't."

She went to bed early and lay awake a long time, reviewing her life. But her thoughts did not come to much, as she said to herself at last, weary with thinking.

"There don't seem to be much we can do," she reflected, "but to be faithful in the place where we're put. If we was somewhere else we should have our trials, an' mebbe good deal bigger ones. I used to think Jennie's ways was a cross, but, dear me, if—there now, I ain't a goin' to hanker after anything I haven't got. I wonder if Jennie's got bedclothes enough this cold weather. I hope she got the mittens."

Mrs. McAlpine finally became oblivious to all anxieties, and slept very soundly. She awoke suddenly, surprised to find that the Christmas dawn was breaking in the east. It seemed to her that some noise had awakened her. She rose early, wondering as she dressed herself if Jennie would have a good Christmas dinner. Her heart was still oppressed with the unacknowledged disappointment that nobody had come, nobody had written.

As she looked out of her window she saw that snow had fallen during the night. The evergreens were lightly powdered, the blackberry vines on the garden wall were like ropes of pearl, the dry stalks of goldenrod bore miraculous white blossoms more beautiful than their summer bravery. And—why, that was strange—there were footsteps, plainly defined, leading from the highway to Aunt Jane's front door. Had somebody entered in the night? Was that what the noise meant that Aunt Jane fancied she had heard? Her silver spoons? She never locked them up though Mis' McCarty, down the road, told her she ought to. She hastened to the cupboard. There were the spoons safe in their place—solid silver, a half dozen of them, marked J. McA., for Aunt Jane's mother. They were destined for "little Jennie." "I ought to make my will," said Mrs. McAlpine, greatly relieved at finding the spoons. I may be took any time, an' then there'll be a pullin' an' haulin'—a spoon in a place among folks that haven't a shadder of right to the things that come by my mother."

So thinking, Aunt Jane struck a match and started her kitchen fire. The flames went roaring up the chimney in a jolly fashion, and the Christmas frost gave way before the heat. Next Mrs. McAlpine went to the front door to get a better view of the footsteps. As she opened the door she stopped amazed on the threshold. She would not have been half so confounded had she met a burglar in full panoply.

"Land sakes alive!" she exclaimed. "A Christmas tree! a little Christmas tree! The beautifulest, perfectest little Christmas tree!"

She took it into the kitchen, easily lifting it, for it was not more than four feet high.

She felt sure that Jennie had planned this beautiful, this wonderful surprise, a surprise such as the hard-working, self-denying woman had never in her whole life experienced before. She began examining the gifts, taking off and undoing one little parcel after another. Ah, Jennie knew what she would like. Here was the very thing she wanted—a soft, white silk neckerchief to wear when she went out. She could tie it around her throat and button her cloak over it, and how snug and comfortable she would be! And here was a pretty handkerchief-case crocheted of pale pink wool, and lined with pink satin to match. Inside were three hemstitched pocket handkerchiefs. Aunt Jane's tears dropped fast as she looked at the dainty gifts. She had never possessed many of the little personal belongings that women like so well. Everything about her, except, indeed, her flowers, had been hard and angular and unattractive. But Jennie had planned her gifts "just as if she were a young girl to whom pretty things belonged naturally."

In spite of Aunt Jane's curiosity, the tree was stripped rather slowly. There were tears to wipe away, there were thoughts that would have their will. How hard Jennie had to work for every cent, yet she had bought all these things for her sour old aunt. She was just like John, poor John, who at last gave his life away. But there were more things on the little Christmas tree—a box of perfumed note paper and envelopes; a funny little penwiper that made Aunt Jane smile as she found it; a tiny booklet full of golden texts, each one with its suggestive picture. At the bottom of the tree there was a larger package containing some warm underwear and a pair of crocheted bedroom slippers. In one of the slippers there was a letter. Jennie wrote very frankly and affectionately. She was not well, she said, but Madame was so hurried that none of the girls could get off at Christmas. "Perhaps later I can come, that is, if you want me, Aunt Jane."

"If I want her! But I don't wonder that the poor child feels uncertain. And here's this house, an' everything comfortable in it, an' money enough, an' she slavin' in the city, with mebbe not half enough to eat."

Aunt Jane had some difficulty in cooking her breakfast and putting it on the table. Her eyes were often blinded with tears, but at her heart there was something warm and fluttering—a little newborn joy.

And "somebody" came that day after all. About eleven o'clock "John's wife's cousin" came in the stage coach from her brother's where she'd been staying for awhile. She brought a basket with her full of Christmas dinner, a roast chicken, celery and a mould of plum pudding. "There's nothin' lackin' but the vegetables an' the cranberry sass," she said.

Aunt Jane went down cellar slowly and silently. She had prepared no Christmas dinner, she had dressed no

Christmas tree, yet while her heart had been so cold, her hands so tardy, these others had been working and giving of their small store for her. Penelope Reed appeared in a new character. She was surely not after her dinner this time. Aunt Jane was overwhelmed.

"They wanted me to stay at Tom's," said Penelope, as the two women sat down to their Christmas dinner. "But I said they had a house full, an' you was alone, an' I was comin' here, an' I come."

"You had better stay awhile now you're here," said Aunt Jane, putting a slice of the chicken's breast and a second joint on Penelope's plate. The guest looked up surprised.

"There ain't any place where I feel so at home, I used to be here so much with John's wife," she said with a little tremor in her voice.

The two women washed up the dishes and sat down before the sitting-room stove, their knitting in their hands. The Christmas tree stood in the window by the chrysanthemums. The bright blossoms found an effective contrast in the sturdy little fir. The fire burned cheerily. The sun came in at the south window and made a great square of light on the rag carpet. The tall clock in the corner kept up its ticking, but to Aunt Jane the monotonous voice was very pleasant, for it seemed to say, "Jennie is coming, Jennie is coming."

THE CHRISTMAS MESSAGE.

BY V. A. LEWIS.

"Ye are all one in Christ Jesus" is the only true Magna Charta of human liberty. It is the one, only, full Declaration of Independence. "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." (Galations 3:28.) The idea of liberty held by the world is always partial, and so in the history of the past and in the experience of the present we find the favored nations, and instead of the duty to uplift the less favored, there is the assumption of superiority and of the right to rule over the weaker held and practiced by the stronger. Instead of the "ye are all one," there is the maxim that "might makes right."

True liberty and fraternity can never prevail among the nations and bring in the "Golden Age" except through this gospel message, announcing, in the Fatherhood of God in Christ Jesus, the brotherhood of man in the regeneration of humanity by the gospel of redemption, wherein all the nations become the kingdom of our Lord Jesus, and therein righteousness dwells to give to each and all the equal rights of a full citizenship. In that nation there would not be any "Jim Crow" cars, but intelligence and power would be ministers of uplifting. The world shows its direct antagonism to the Christ truth in the other lines of life, as it holds among the nations "the Jew and Greek difference"; so in social lines there is a law for the one who serves, and another for the one who has wealth to command. The bitterness in the heart of humanity is because there is the "bond and free," and because there is for the man of wealth a liberty that is denied to the poor man.

It is not the difference in the labor and the possessions that embitters, but the distinction that is made on the ground of that difference, that arrays "classes" against each other and brings on the tumults and the strikes of the labor party. Men will work and will willingly obey those superior to them, and will acknowledge the right of that leader or superintendent or owner to enjoy a larger reward for the superior labor, but men will never be content to be treated as bondmen. It is the class difference that is set up, that creates the antagonism and produces the strife.

So long as one family, because it has accumulated a fortune, considers it is made of porcelain, and that the poor worker is of only common clay, and thereby assumes the right to use that wealth for profuse personal indulgence and enjoyment, there will be produced the hatred and violence of those who are held as bondmen. When wealth uses its power to assist and uplift and the gospel word prevails, "Let him be your servant, whosoever will be chief among you," then there will be peace. There is but the one remedy for the evils that fill the world of labor and capital with strife, and that is the Gospel Magna Charta, "There is neither bond nor free."

The world has always been the oppressor of woman. In this it shows the essential meanness and the cruelty of the carnal heart in its enmity against God. In the Bible only do you find the Declaration of Independence for women. It is concise and to the point, asserting that in all the grave questions of morals and justice, "there is neither male nor female." Yet the one distinction between the world and Christ is the treatment of women. The world asserts that there is a difference between male and female, and all down the ages has proved the sincerity of its assertion by the oppression of woman, in law and custom, making a wide difference between the male and female.

In civilized countries, boasting themselves of their culture and intelligence, the courts of law have held minors of from six to eight years of age hardly responsible for violations of the law, and except in some exceptional cases have reprimanded and warned the young culprit and set him free from the penalty. But only by desperate efforts have the women secured in these latter days the raising of the "age of consent," as it is called, to twelve and sixteen years. Before that, the female child of six years was held liable to all the penalties and the evil results of the seducer, though he was of mature years. It was not so much the law of the past that showed the meanness of the male oppressor, as that when the effort was made to remedy the gross injustice, it met the most strenuous opposition and required years of effort and painful struggle through insult to obtain entrance on that page of legislation for the words "there is neither male nor female," that if the male of six or ten is not responsible fully before the law, neither is the female of that age.

There is no need to go into the fields, where there might be opportunity for philosophical argument and legitimate difference of opinion, as to what is best suited for the powers of either sex. It is in the fields of morals and of the administration of justice that we find the principle manifested. The daily report of newspapers reads as follows: "Last night the police made a raid on several houses and captured the inmates who were brought before the justice this morning. After examination the woman proprietor was committed for trial and the other women were fined; the men were discharged."

In all these so-called exhibitions of justice there is the same difference made between male and female, and to the woman there can come true freedom and deliverance only through the Magna Charta of humanity that is found in the words, "There is neither male nor female" in all the moral questions of life. "The white life for two" has become the rallying cry of womanhood seeking deliverance from the oppression of the world, and it will win, for it is of God, and is only another form of the Declaration of Independence given of old in the Bible. Redemption from the thralldom of the evil of this world, in its myriad forms, is to be found alone in the message of the great King, and true freedom will reign only when "His kingdom shall stretch from shore to shore," and the daily proclamation shall be this Magna Charta, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for we are all one in Christ Jesus."

The day of freedom may tarry, but it will surely come, for it is of God.

"God's ways seem dark, but soon or late,
They touch the shining hills of day.
. . . . . .
"Ye have the future grand and great,
The safe appeal of Truth to Time."

WHY NOT CONFESS?

BY EDWARD CLIFFORD.
Honorary Secretary of the Church Army, London, Eng.

Why should we be so unwilling to confess our faults to one another? A good woman almost never admits that she has done wrong, and a good man very seldom admits it. Yet surely it would be all gain and no loss to do so.

For instance: "I am told," says an angry friend, "that you have laughed at me and told ridiculous stories of me behind my back." Why should I not say in reply, if the truth of the accusation convicts me, "It is all true, alas! all true. It was hateful of me, how could I do such a thing? I have never said spiteful things about you, but I admit with shame that I did repeat some ridiculous things about you. But are you so much surprised? Did you expect me to be a friend without a fault?" After such a confession could anything happen but forgiveness?

"I want to tell you something, Eliza," said John to his wife, "I have been very mean about money. I have no excuse, but I beat down, from the force of habit, that poor woman who was selling door mats. She was poor and I am well off. Why did I grudge her a fair profit? I despise myself, and I shall go and pay her the difference." How cleansing such a confession would be!

"Marian," said Mrs. Martin to her friend, "I have been a snob this year, and you have been very good. I know that I have neglected and snubbed you, my oldest friend. I did not come to your party or ask you to mine. It was all because I was getting into a new and smarter set. I detest myself for it. Will you forgive me? I mean never to do it again, and I value you a thousand times more than I value these new acquaintances."

A flood of spiritual joy one day took possession of Ernest Gore. One result of it was that he called on a tiresome, poor, good, old second cousin of his, who was continually leading up to receiving help and presents from him. "John," he said, "I have brought you fifty pounds to make you a little more comfortable. Forgive me that I have been so unresponsive. I know you are better than I am, and if we both died to-day, you would be the rich man and I should be the poor one. Buy some better clothes, ask a friend to dinner sometimes and go to Brighton for a change."

"Vicar," said a curate, "I believe I ought to leave you and in disgrace. I have tampered with a wrong affection for some one in the congregation. It was partly her fault, but of course it has been a much worse sin in me. Nobody else knows of it, but I will tell you all and go, if you say 'go.' I wish I had told you six weeks earlier. I have sinned against you and her and the people, and most of all against God, whose providence alone has kept me from a black fall. Forgive me even if you punish me." "Rawlings," replied the vicar, "I blame myself. I have kept you at a distance and been unfriendly because I was jealous of you. Your youth and pleasantness and your popular preaching have made me grind my teeth. Stay with us. We will go together to the lady and be perfectly frank about the matter." They went, the confession answered well on all sides, and the evil ended.

A sermon of Eyton's convicted Mrs. Robinson, and as she left the church she said to her husband, "If I do not confess it now, this moment, I feel I shall never confess it. I have nagged you. You were to blame, but still I ought not to have done it so much. That is as far as I will go." Here she burst into tears and then went on: "Robert, I will admit that it was almost entirely my fault, but it is very teasing to me when you keep your temper so provokingly." Here she sobbed. "No, I will unsay that. I believe it was really and truly all my fault. Oh, if you did but know how hard it is to say this."

"Selina," said Charles, "I know I have been a beast about the dinner. I think I am naturally greedy and too fond of my food. I wish I had not grumbled yesterday at the fried plaice coming so often, and at the weak coffee. I will try and do better, and so I am sure will you."

"Sarah," said her mother-in-law, "in future I will not be a nuisance, but will let you manage your house and husband and children in your own way, unless it is in matters in which I feel sure I am right. I often have interfered when I ought not, and now I ask your forgiveness."

"Stainforth," wrote a politician, "I wish to apologize to you and say that I won't do it again. I wilfully damaged you unjustly on the two following points—I have repeatedly called you a humbug, and I believe I was entirely; wrong I have also called you a fool, and there again I was mistaken."

Thieves, murderers, loose livers, evil speakers, cheats, ill-tempered people, proud people, stingy people, disagreeable people, why not confess your faults and get cleansed and delivered from them?

THE HOUSE-WARMING.

BY SARAH K. BOLTON.

"Almost ready for the great event," said Mr. Josiah Midland, portly and genial, to his wife, Martha, as they stood on the porch of a two-story brick house, nearly completed. "I want the new house for you, Martha, and I want it also, I must confess, to show the people of Collinston that Josiah Midland has been a financial success. You know life has been a struggle since I left this town a boy, and worked my way on the railroad to a place of trust. Life is not an easy thing for the best of us, and where the one gains in the race, the many are so bound by the needs of every day that they can never rise above their surroundings. I kept good habits and saved my money. I owe that teaching to my hard-working mother."

"Yes, you have been a great success," said the thin and careworn wife who had shared his struggles and did not possess his buoyant temperament to throw off the wear of daily life. "I almost dread to have a house-warming for it will cost so much and bring no end of work. I should like to have the people see our beautiful home, but you know I cannot shine in society."

Mrs. Midland looked up to her husband as the great factor in their worldly gains, and so he was, but he owed much to the economy and good sense of the quiet woman who was glad to be his helper.

"Oh, you will shine enough, Martha, so that I shall be proud of you. After the furniture is once in the house, we will invite everybody, yes, everybody, rich and poor. It's great folly for a man to make social distinctions for himself as soon as he has a few thousands. I want to have them all enjoy the house. It's the handsomest house in the village, and they'll all be glad to come. The caterer will provide the supper, and you'll just have to shake hands with the guests and look pleased."

"What do you think I had better wear, Josiah?"

"Oh, you must have a new dress for the occasion. I like garnet. Get a garnet silk with a good deal of velvet, and you'll look handsome!" And Mr. Midland smiled in his big-hearted way, that had won him friends from his boyhood.

The new moon had risen in the west, and the stars were coming out brightly, as if all nature even was glad at Mr. Midland's success. As they left the house the church bells rang out.

"Let us go," said Mr. Midland. "The minister told me the other day that an evangelist was coming here. I forgot all about it, but it might pay us to go and hear him once. Religion isn't a thing of emotion to me, but I like to hear good preaching. I've never had any notion of joining a church myself, but I don't know what the community would be without the churches. Property would go down pretty quickly."

The minister, as was human, felt the blood quicken in his veins, as the successful railroad man and his wife entered. Not that they were more important than poor people, but he knew that money consecrated to good ends is a power almost unlimited. He could only silently pray that some word would be uttered which would touch Mr. Midland's heart.

The young evangelist preached, not an extraordinary sermon, but a simple talk upon the power of a good life—a life that came but once and was spent so quickly. Mr. Midland sat like one awakened out of sleep. True, he had made money; he had a good moral character, but he would go through life but once, and he was living entirely for himself. He had never realized what a wonderful gift from heaven this life is, with all its possibilities to help others, to make the poor comfortable, the sad happy, to remove the causes of crime and discontent. He seemed all at once to have made a voyage of discovery and to have found a new land.

He said little on the way home, except to tell Martha that he felt strangely and that she must go to bed and sleep, but he would sit up awhile and think. Mr. Midland did think long and carefully by the shaded lamp. He thought over his whole past experience. He had been prospered, and he owed all to a Higher Power. And after he had thought, he prayed.

In the morning he said: "Martha, I have given up the house-warming. I have decided to use the money to send a boy to college to become a preacher;" and then he added, "For a man who turns the life of another heavenward, does the greatest work in the world, and I must help to do the greatest hereafter."

Mrs. Midland looked confused for a minute, and then she said, half audibly, "I am very glad, Josiah." After that night Mr. Midland's face took on an expression that was noted till his death, years afterward. It was as though he had talked with the angels and joined a new brotherhood. The genial man became more genial, more considerate, more self-controlled. It became literally true that, like his Master, "he went about doing good." Without children of his own, he devoted his property to the giving of the gospel to the people. He joined heartily by voice and money in all that elevated mankind. He built houses for the poor; he educated orphans; he held prayer-meetings in sparsely settled districts; he labored for temperance; he became the idol and ideal man of the community. He carried out his plan of using the house-warming money to educate a young man for the ministry, and lived to see his gift return him a thousand fold interest.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE MEETINGS.

The meetings in Willard Hall for sometime have been unusually interesting. Mrs. Ella G. Cline, of West Liberty, Iowa, spoke on "Christian Citizenship." She said in part: "For the paltry license fee of $150,000,000, there are existing in this country 250,000 saloons; masked batteries marshaled against the welfare of the Republic. This great nation, boasting of its Christian citizenship, becomes a partner with the saloon by accepting the license fee and sanctioning the business. No nation has ever lost its moral character and maintained its liberties. There is only one way by which a man can stamp his individual morality or Christianity upon the nation, and that is by his ballot. There is only one point where the citizen comes in contact with the nation, and that is at the ballot box. The ballot is a sacred debt which the citizen owes the nation. Shall it be paid one hundred cents on the dollar or shall it go by default?"

. . . . . .

Miss Elizabeth Preston, North Dakota's loved president, while on the wing, tired and worn out with travel, was kind enough to come to the meeting and leave a message of good cheer with the people. Her keynote was, "Let us deny ourselves and take up our cross and follow Him." Her talk was followed by one minute speeches from a great number of persons.

. . . . . .

Our own state president, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, whose voice and pen, and in fact whose life, is spent in the line of gospel temperance work, spoke to us acceptably. She took for her text the story of the rich young man who came to Christ and asked what to do to inherit eternal life. Mrs. Rounds presented the subject in a most impressive manner, with good results.

Field Notes No. 1.

My Dear Comrades:—We will let the "Round-the-world" series lie over for a while and take up "Field Notes" in our own country.

Coming to Chicago soon after the Baltimore Convention, I had delightful interviews with the General Officers and Heads of Departments and affiliated interests in the Woman's Temple. It was encouraging to find there a spirit of sisterly coöperation and good cheer that brightens all who come under the helpful influence of our devoted Headquarter's band. The Willard Hall noon meetings are steadily increasing in interest. Our sister, Mrs. Marion Baxter, has been a strong power in building up that branch of our work, but she is in much demand in the field and will go out this winter to put in operation the financial plan described by me in a recent Union Signal. Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, who is devoted to the rescue work, has been put in charge of the noon meetings by the Central W. C. T. U., and we shall hear of excellent results, I feel assured.

The Anchorage for Friendless Girls is much larger and more useful than ever, thanks to the help given us by Brother Crittenton and the devoted personal care of Miss Alice Bond, Mrs. Vail, and Miss Lyman, the matron, who seems to be just "the woman for the place."

I lunched with our sisters at the Woman's Temperance Hospital and we put our heads together to plan for an enlargement of this enterprise and to set up housekeeping of our own as soon as the way opens a little wider.

The Temple Trustees held a meeting and felt strongly encouraged by the steady interest manifested among our local unions,—of this, however, "more anon."

We went to Evanston and called on a score of families dear to us, being entertained at our beloved Rest Cottage, where we were made to feel perfectly at home by the good friends who live there and who are most loyal to the hallowed memories of that endeared old home, where we hope to live again some day.

We went to the Woman's College to see Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller, who is at its head, and as the bright sunshine flooded the rooms in which I once thought to have my perpetual habitation and to be a teacher of young people the rest of my days, I looked with earnest pleasure on the face of the noble woman whose work it is and who does it so well. We went to see our dear Mrs. S. M. I. Henry in Chicago, and found her far from well in body, but with a spirit chastened and purified until there seems to be but a step between her and heaven. It was sweet to talk with her of the long, laborious years in which we have been yoke-fellows, to learn of the good work that is being done by her gifted children, one of them a minister, another a journalist, and her only daughter preceptress of a college, but it was best of all to hear her declare that "it seemed as though all she had to say was said and all she had to do was done, and though this world had been beautiful in her sight, she was beyond language thankful that we can all leave it for one infinitely better when God has finished His purposes with us on earth." She may remain for some time yet, and I think that few members of our white-ribbon family are more endeared, but she is ready to go or stay, and her face has in it the serene light that never shone on sea or shore.

We left Chicago, where we had been delightfully entertained by my cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lemon, and after a happy Sunday with Dr. and Mrs. Terry, of the Theological Seminary in Evanston, and participating in a meeting for the Armenians, we set our faces toward the South on the 20th of November, coming directly through to Lexington, Ky., where we are now snugly ensconsed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp. Many white-ribbon women know this sweet home of Christian peace and beneficent activity. Mrs. Beauchamp is president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., and her husband is a leading lawyer in Lexington. As a matter of course we have visited the family of our beloved brother and sister, Col. George W. and Mrs. Bain. They are most pleasantly situated. The homes of their noble sons, George and John, are near by, and their gentle daughter, Annie, is with them, and Mrs. Bain is bringing up the three children of their lovely lost Laura, who was her father over again. No man is better beloved at a distance than Colonel Bain is in his own city, and I rejoice that such a jewel has the setting of such a home.

We are to have several meetings among the women and children for the purpose of extending our work. We believe that the hidings of power are in the mother and child. We do not expect to see the fruit of our doings as early as we hoped to in years of less experience. There are no great campaigns on hand, but there is plenty of that quiet, but persistent, "pegging away" that Abraham Lincoln, greatest of the Kentuckians, believed to be the foundation of success. We learn that the women here have the school suffrage, and two thousand registered previous to the recent election, about one thousand of them being colored women. They voted in large numbers at the last election, and men say that one so quiet and well ordered was never known in Lexington. The school ballot box was located but seventy feet away from the regular polling booth, and the inspectors and judges of election under the school ballot law were all women, though as a matter of course there were many more men at the polls, for they have some centuries the start of us in the habit of going! The W. C. T. U. has maintained a kindergarten for years, but finally induced the school authorities to take it under their wing.

We are trying to arrange for the L. T. L. boys and girls to put their pennies together and present the "Little Cold Water Girl" fountain to Lexington—a duplicate of the one that Anna Gordon was the means of securing for Chicago from the temperance children the world over.

At a meeting of women that I addressed yesterday, the following petition was numerously signed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of ——:

We, your petitioners, beg to present the following facts, viz.: The researches of scientific men have proved that inebriety is a disease; that the appetite is cumulative, growing by what it feeds on. For these reasons, combined with the incitement of hereditary appetite and the powerful temptation of the saloon, numbers of men in every community become the slaves of alcohol. As a result of this their own lives are endangered and their characters steadily deteriorate, while their homes become less pure, happy and safe, society is on a lower plane and the state suffers the loss of those who might have been patriotic and useful citizens.

For these, and many other reasons, we appeal to you to frame a law whereby men who are proved to be habitual inebriates, shall be assigned by the courts of the Commonwealth to industrial homes of detention for a period of from one to two years, or less, according to conduct.

We urge this practical temperance measure in the interest of the inebriate himself, as well as of those who are incalculably injured by his habits, for long experience has convinced us that under existing conditions, reformation is wellnigh impossible, unless, by some means, sufficient time is afforded to cleanse the system from the presence of alcoholic poison.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union will do all in its power to help those who are under the drink bondage, and to solace those whose homes have been desolated by the alcohol curse; but we beg you to furnish, as you only can, the added guarantees and safeguards of the law.

I hope a similar petition may be presented in every state in the Union and every country of the globe.

Frances E. Willard.

THANKSGIVING IN CALIFORNIA.

Dear Union Signal:—Californians go to church on Thanksgiving Day, but under other conditions than those which surround the thankful people of the North and East. Our lonely little family of three drove to service in an open surrey, some of us with heavy wraps and some with light ones. This is an accommodating climate, that accepts what you may have in the way of clothes without any curious questions, and the same is true of society here. So far it has not grown conventional enough to demand a change of clothing for each of the four seasons. Heaven grant that it never may!

As we drove along in the bright sunshine, missing so keenly the dear one who used to hold the lines on such occasions and was not slow to express his thankfulness for life, health and the faculty of enjoying this beautiful climate, our hearts seemed to sing a double refrain to this sad anniversary—one of joy for his eternal thanksgiving and one of unspeakable loneliness for the years of separation that will probably be ours.

The sunshine had just the comfortable warmth that made one bless its gentle touch and the snow on the mountains gave a sparkling tone to the atmosphere that invited activity of thought and action. There is nothing enervating about this air; people who are lazy here would be lazy anywhere. Flowers in profusion were blooming on either side of the road, and their fragrance gratified our senses.

There was a little fire in a small stove in the church, but windows and doors were open, and the audience arrived with parasols, fans or furs, just as the fancy dictated or ideas of propriety and comfort suggested.

The service over, people repaired to the festal board, for the Thanksgiving turkey is the order of the day here as well as in colder climes. The one noticeable missing factor here, as in all new countries, is that of family reunions. It is seldom that all the branches of a family are to be found in the borders of the state, and even if they are, the distances are too great for frequent reunions. Hotel dinners are very popular on anniversary occasions, as domestic help is scarce, and there is lacking old associations of family ties; dinner at Grandma's this year and at Aunt Mary's next is not to be depended upon here.

Californians have two things to be thankful for this year—a good orange crop and an influx of tourists. The early cold season in the East is sending many people to this sunshiny coast, and that means good business for all classes of merchants and hotel proprietors. It is almost impossible to realize that winter prevails anywhere, as we sit on the porch and view the laden orange trees and the bright blossoms. The nights are cool and occasionally there is a little frost and ice in the morning, which the warm sun soon dispels. There have already been sufficient rains to lay the dust and freshen the foliage. Speaking of rains, let me say that they are really pleasant. As a rule, they come down warm and gentle, and falling on the sandy soil, make no mud whatever. But I must desist, or my readers will infer that I have gone into the real estate business, which I haven't!

Christmas talk is in the air, but none of nature's usual accompaniments have yet put in an appearance. I hear that a fur-coated, sleigh-belled Santa Claus is the orthodox celebration out here as in the North, but I must wait and see about that and tell in my next letter.

Fraternally yours,

Colton, Cal. MARGARET A. SUDDUTH.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The National Temperance Congress, at Chester, which I mentioned in a former letter, proved to be a highly successful gathering. Arranged by the National Temperance League, the program contained an imposing array of names—many of them those of experts in different phases of temperance work, and others of more note still in other walks. The program included papers and discussions on a variety of topics, from juvenile temperance societies to prohibition—not that the word occurred, but the subject can never be kept out of our English discussions of legal remedies for the drink evil. A large and very representative gathering assembled, and apart from the congress sittings proper, the social functions were of a high order. Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, as president of the congress, and the Bishop of London as president of the League, both gave addresses of much worth—the former especially, for Dr. Richardson's inaugural address swept the entire gamut of scientific reasoning in proof of the impregnable position of total abstinence. A visit to Hawarden (Mr. Gladstone's place) and Eaton Hall (the Duke of Westminster's) together with a public reception by the mayor of the city, made up pleasurable interludes, though unhappily the mayor, who is not an abstainer, so far forgot the duty of host as to provide "claret cups" for his local civic guests, who, unlike the members of the congress they came to meet, did not abstain!

The congress itself discussed, as has been intimated, a great many topics. Principal, perhaps, in current interest was a paper by the Bishop of Chester, advocating the adaptation to England of the Gothenberg scheme of liquor selling, but his arguments were promptly refuted by Mr. Malin, of the Good Templars, who showed from personal investigation how little the system is to be relied on to meet the admitted evils of drinkdom. Among other meetings was one for women, at which Mrs. Gladstone was present. After hearing an exposition from Dr. Sarah J. Anderson Brown, of the Inebriate Home Farm Colony scheme, promoted by Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Gladstone gave her name and a donation in aid of the homes. On the whole the congress coming, soon after the disappointments of the general election, tended to give emphasis to the fact that the temperance forces of England are neither defeated nor disheartened.

The United Kingdom Alliance for the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic held its annual meetings lately in Manchester. Five thousand people filled the historic Free Trade Hall, and were as earnest and enthusiastic as ever they were in indorsing the principle of the Alliance, and in demanding the power for the people to put the liquor traffic down. This gathering, widely representative of all the best and most vigorous thought on the temperance question in the United Kingdom, was a capital answer to the pessimists who have thought and said that our late election had "killed the veto." Not a bit of it. The principle is very much alive, and the demand will go on till laggard law-makers concede it in the form of law.

The quarterly meetings of the National executive of the B. W. T. A. have been held at Plymouth since I last wrote. They were most successful. The public meeting in the Guild Hall was everything that could be desired, and an afternoon conference, specially on the subject of the Inebriate Home scheme, warmly endorsed the same, and pledged Plymouth to raise £250 ($1,250) to build and furnish a cottage, to be named the "Agnes Weston," after the indefatigable sailors' friend, who is an active member of the executive, and president of the local branch. In many other quarters substantial help is being volunteered to the farm homes, and the plan bids fair to be a great success.

HENRY J. OSBORN.

London, England.

DEAR COMRADES:—As I sit in my quiet corner of observation and outlook, many good hints reach me touching what may be done in our unions and how, and I am glad to occasionally make our weekly conference a channel through which these practical thoughts may reach you.

---

In a recent article by Miss Mary H. A. Mather, my attention was arrested by this phrase: "After we have taken our little home collection for the temperance work."

Every "once in so often" we hear of a family living far from any center of temperance work that would be glad to help on the good cause. Organize a Home W. C. T. U. Mother may be president, and other officers elected according to supply of candidates on hand. THE UNION SIGNAL, Young Women and The Young Crusader might be subscribed for, together with other temperance reading matter. If there is a family of young people, a little ingenious thought will suggest ways in which they can earn money for temperance work, and at each "meeting" the home collection could be taken and the amount turned over to the treasurer.

Of course this whole scheme would be modified by the local circumstances and conditions. The little—or it might possibly be more than "little"—fund in the treasury could be used to do definite temperance work amid families suffering because of a drunken father or mother; or it might be contributed to any one of our affiliated interests. The main thing would be the instilling of strong temperance principles in the home and the larger results that are always possible where one brand from the Crusade fire is kept alive.

Mrs. Mary L. Wyatt, a white-ribboner of ready pen and quick thought for our cause, sends to our column the folfowing good counsel:

"Do we make enough of the reception of new members into our unions? We take their assessments and see that they sign the pledge and wear the white ribbon, but that is about all. The following little ceremony has been successfully used: There were two women to be received into the union and they had already paid their assessments and had signed the pledge. After the devotional exercises and preliminary business the president asked all to rise. One of the ladies had been a member of another union and to her were given a few words of welcome and the hope expressed that she would find it as pleasant to work with this union as with the one to which she had formerly belonged. To the new member the president said: "I congratulate you upon this privilege and welcome you cordially in behalf of all, to our membership, to all its pleasures and duties. You are now a member of the greatest organization of women in the world, and in its forty or more departments there is an opportunity for work in every branch of Christian service. (Tying on the white ribbon.)

"To the ribbon white be loyal
Bind it to your heart,
For in all our peaceful warfare
It must have a part.

"In the battle we are waging,
For our God and right,
Be our oriflamme of love
The bow of ribbon white."

After this all in the room joined hands with the new members, and forming a circle, sang "Blest be the tie that binds."

---

"Where there's a will there's a way" has more to do with accomplishment than we are sometimes aware. Several months ago the Loyal Temperance Legion of Illinois appointed a young woman as agent for the children's paper, The Young Crusader, and she set herself a "stint"—one hundred new subscribers from Illinois. She had two plans in her busy brain. One, to get as many as possible to subscribe for themselves, the other to raise money somehow to donate a large number of copies. By dint of vigorous correspondence this agent secured clubs from different towns, and then, in order to take advantage of club rates—twelve cents for each subscription when paper is delivered in packages of one hundred to one address—has the papers sent to herself, and then remails them to "her" subscribers. She says: "It makes a great deal of work, but the most I can do is so little compared to the need I do not mind." Her second plan was carried out on this wise: She got up a medal contest, charged a small admission fee, packed the house, and after all the bills were paid forwarded to the W. T. P. A. over forty-five dollars, all to be expended in subscriptions to the children's paper. This placed it in the parochial and public schools, an industrial school, a mission and the state reformatory, and now hundreds of children will read during 1896 a Christian temperance paper who otherwise would never have been thus blessed.

Who will take the hint?

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised. And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works.—Heb. 10 : 23, 24.

The "Trumpet Blast" which pealed forth in the last UNION SIGNAL from the general officers of the National W. C. T. U. with no uncertain sound, had not time to have the echo of its stirring call reach the golden sands of the Pacific nor even touch the stormy shores of the Atlantic before answers from hearts fired with love and zeal for our holy cause and for the ownership of the "House Beautiful" came pouring in. The first, a five dollar gold piece, is from a widow who could illy spare it. She writes: "I want to be among the first to send in my five dollars in answer to the call. I hope every white-ribboner in the land may be moved to pay this amount at least." The second five dollars comes from our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson. The third from the managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry, and the fourth from Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman. This great-hearted woman, besides the five dollars just paid on the new call, has before given a hundred dollars to the Temple.

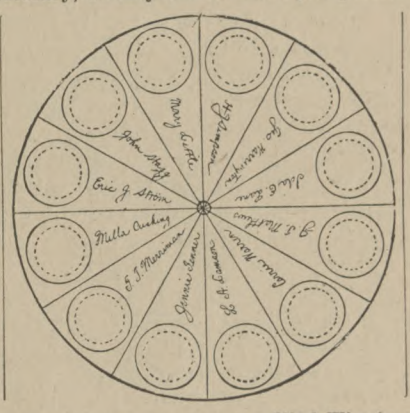
"What ought to be done can be done. We ought to own the Temple," says our general officers. It seems as though this sentiment must find an echo in the heart of every true white-ribboner, and make each one ask the question, "How much can I give, and in what way can I deny myself to insure the success of this enterprise which means so much to our great reform?" If this question is asked in all honesty both large and small sums will pour into the treasury. Those who must secure the stipulated five dollars outside of their own resources, will find the Temple brick, a description of which was given in last week's "Temple Items," a great aid. We hope to have it ready to mail to all who send for it next week; a two cent stamp should be sent to pay postage on one dozen. We still consider the Temple Wheel an admirable way of raising money. We find that many are being stolen through the mails. On this account we request that when they are returned to us by mail the dimes be taken out and a money order or check be sent for the amount. The empty Wheel can be sent for two cents by mail. Where there are as many as half a dozen filled Wheels the above precaution is not necessary, as they can be sent by express.

IF YOU WANT TO OWN TWENTY BRICKS IN THE TEMPLE, FILL FIVE WHEELS.....



SPEED YOUR WHEELS ALONG WITH THEIR SILVER FREIGHT FOR THE REDEMPTION OF THE TEMPLE.....

We are receiving a great many filled Wheels now each day. The Pengelly union, Kalamazoo, Mich., has pledged one hundred dollars and has returned twenty-four filled Wheels toward it. The Houlton, Me., W. C. T. U. has just sent eighteen filled Wheels. Mrs. Ella S. Bennett has just sent forty-six filled Wheels on a pledge of one hundred dollars by the Willimantic, Conn., W. C. T. U.

The Central union of Detroit, Mich., has sent $92.50 which completes their pledge. The Seekonk and East Providence, R. I., W. C. T. U. sends $41, which was the balance due on their pledge. The Westminster, Mass., W. C. T. U. completes their pledge by paying $20. The Menominee, Mich., W. C. T. U. has also completed their hundred dollar pledge by the payment of the last installment of $15. The Sparta, Wis., union has pledged a hundred dollars and paid an installment of $26.

An aged saint, eighty years old, who lives in Pittsfield, Mass., writes: "The Sanballats are not all dead yet, nor are all the Nehemiahs, bless the Lord. Keep up good heart, the Lord's on your side. I am a widow, with very limited means, but I want to help the Temple a little. Please accept my two shares of W. T. P. A. stock, worth $50." One who signs herself "A white-ribboner from Baltimore county, Md.," writes: "Enclosed find $10 for the Temple. I wish I could make it $100. I do not think the Sanballats can do much harm, etc." Twenty-five dollars comes from a friend in Panama, N. Y. It is in memory of a beloved mother, who was greatly interested in the Temple, and was a devoted white-ribboner. In the dawn of the present year she was suddenly called home. Miss Mabel J. Smith and Miss Jane A. Green, Binghampton, N. Y., send a joint check for $30. From the above can be seen what unions and individuals are doing for the Temple. If others in our ranks equally able would but do their part as nobly, "The Trumpet Blast" of the National officers would soon be turned into a cry of victory.

All orders for Temple Wheels, Temple bricks, mite-boxes and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago.

THE CHRISTMAS MESSAGE.

BY LILLIAN F. LEWIS.

As there echoes that Christmas-tide story of old
By seraph and angels so wondrously told,
And the air is atune to the jubilee strain
That surprised the still night on Judea's lit plain,—
With the vision renewed by that heralded song
Of the Star of the East in its marches along,
Comes the thought of those sages, who royal gifts brought,
And all eager to worship, the Christ-presence sought,—
What oblation ours chosen to gratefully bring
This same Jesus to-day?
Not alone the glad pæans we feelingly sing
Nor the homage we pay
Shall attest that we own and enthrone Him our King.
'Tis the gift of our all freely laid at His feet,
Which shall constitute offering loyal and meet.
Not enough that before His face prostrate we fall,
If our diadem crown Him not "Lord of all."

Then beside the sweet spices, in heart's choicest lays,
And the fragrant lip-incense of prayer and of praise
We befittingly offer this best of all days,—

Let us bring Him, as gold, counted precious and tried,
A rich faith, firm to trust Him, whatever betide,
And a love and a life to the Master's allied.

Let us frankincense bring in our tribute of cheer,
In our tendered thanksgiving for blessings most dear,
And the treasure, past price, of the penitent tear.

Let us bring, too, the myrrh of life's bitter and care,
Since He came all humanity's sorrow to share,
And entreats that we give Him our burdens to bear.

As resounds that sweet story of ages ago,
That but gathers fresh charm as the years riper grow,
With its message so simple, so strange, so sublime,
In appeal to all classes of every clime—
What deep marvel, that darkness and evil hold place
In this century's era and day of His grace;
That its "Peace on the earth, and good will unto men"
Seeks not "glory to God in the highest," as then.
Is the witness we bear ever faithful and true
To make better the world?
In all inner endeavor, all work that we do,
Is His banner unfurled?
Let us proffer Him pledge of allegiance anew,
For 'tis service untiring, which laid at His feet,
From a "love that constraineth," He deemeth gift meet.
Let us prove our devotion by doing His will,
In obedience striving His plans to fulfill.

AN EMPTY STOCKING.

BY META E. B. THORNE.

Far up in one of the highest stories of a big tenement house, a building old and dilapidated and avoided by all decent families, is a desolate room whose broken windows are stuffed with rags, door panels cracked, plastering tumbling down, walls black and gloomy; a room empty of furniture save a rickety table and chair, and a heap of something in one corner to serve for a bed; a cupboard bare but for two or three cracked and empty dishes; a handful of coals on the hearth to replenish whose dying glow nothing can be seen.

Steal softly to yonder corner and peep at the occupant of that lowly bed. You will see a tangle of gold on the pillow, a sweet, blossomlike face, daintily moulded hands and arms tossed above the sunny head in careless ease, the whole attitude embodying childhood's innocent grace.

Seated in the broken chair beside the rickety table, her head laid upon her arm, a woman weeps, her slight form shaken by such sobs as only the deepest anguish wrings from a torn heart.

A life of such painful vicissitude as that of Ada Westbrook might well break the strongest nature; yet rarely does she thus yield to grief and despair. Had you been here a short half hour ago you, too, would have wept in sympathy as you heard the artless pleading of that lovely child.

"Oh, please, mamma! do hang up my stocking as we used to at home! Doesn't Santa Claus come to this place, mamma? I wish he wouldn't forget poor little girls like me!"

Poor mother, though with pain of heart no pen can describe, and nothing to put into that stocking could she voice a denial to that request? So there it hangs by the chimney side, that tiny, almost worn-out stocking, a pitiful accessory to the general desolation.

Then the little one, kneeling by her mother's side, in sweet tones repeats, "Now I lay me down to sleep," then, "God bless papa."

"Mamma, will papa come home to-night?"

"I don't know, Mabel, love."

"I wish papa would come—as he used to, mamma,—not cross, you know, mamma, and not—rough, or—or—stumbling, or—or—" there was a sob in the voice now, but it went on, "I think I wouldn't mind then, mamma, if Santa Claus didn't come, or put anything in my stocking," and she looked wistfully at the pathetic little network of darning. "That's what I mean, mamma, when I say, 'God bless papa,'—'Make him all nice again;' I'd rather have that than anything else in the world, wouldn't you, mamma?"

With bursting heart, but struggling to repress all emotion, Mrs. Westbrook simply bowed her head.

But now as the little one is peacefully sleeping the mother finds some relief for her agony in the bitterest tears a woman can shed. Yet the hand of a loving Father is even now interposing in her behalf.

Something in the atmosphere of the day has filled with unrest the spirit of Philip Westbrook so that he has found no pleasure in his usual haunts. He has wandered to and fro, and his eyes less dimmed than usual by the mists of liquor, have observed much that would ordinarily be overlooked,—the stores, with their attractive displays; the merry crowds jostling each other good-naturedly in haste to relieve the overladen shelves; the busy workers about the various churches, who with trees and wreaths and garlands and loads on loads of toys, are preparing for the festivities of the evening. And now as night has fallen, in passing one of these beautiful edifices, his ear is greeted by a burst of music, the familiar words and tune of grand old "Antioch" almost in spite of himself draw him within the doors. As in a dream he gazes upon the brilliant room, the rich decorations, the laden trees, the sea of happy faces. Now arises the incense of prayer, and again children's voices joined in praise bring to his ear the beautiful words of the Quaker poet set to appropriate music,—words that stamp themselves indelibly upon that erring heart,

"We touch Him in life's throng and press
And we are whole again."

With the words, a new courage seems to enter his soul, a sense of divine love and compassion and help fills his mind. By-and-by the stir, as half a dozen little girls trip forward to the platform, arouses him to hear their fresh voices trill out that sweet, simple song that will never lose its charm, "Hang up the baby's stocking." But it is too much for him; it brings to him memories which will not be banished. It was a favorite of his wife's. Many a time has he heard her singing it to delight her wee ones in the happy past. "Little Phil," now an inhabitant of the land where sorrow and sickness are unknown, made his first attempts at singing, trying that little song; and when the sweet earth blossom nipped by untimely frosts, faded away, his last audible words, pointing to his baby sister were, "Hang up baby 'tockie!" Oh, the haunting memories flashing through the father's mind! How they sting him and hurry him onward!

A few blocks from the church and his eye is caught by a glimpse through a broad, unshaded window, of a brightly lighted room, whose glowing fireplace is adorned by a row of stockings, the happy owners of which, with "goodnight" kisses to their parents, are just retiring with their nurse. The mother then steps into an adjoining room whence she brings a large and elegantly dressed doll to display for the admiration of her husband and of the unseen spectator outside.

With a groan he turns and as though driven by the Furies hurries on and is soon climbing the stairs to his own dismal abode, such a contrast to the scene just beheld! Slowly he climbs the last flight, softly approaching the door where he pauses. He hears his child's pleading voice, and through the broken panel sees his wife hang up the poor little stocking to gratify her. He hears the prayer of the little one and her tender words of love for her wretched father. Such torture as wrings the heart of the listener!

Down the long flights of stairs he slips and with all speed makes his way to a former employer. "You were very patient and forbearing with me, Mr. Norton, and I know I tried you severely. And even when at last you were compelled to send me away, you spoke kindly, hoping for my reformation. That was months ago, and I have been very low since then, though I have, indeed, tried many times to reform. But, sir, the Lord has just given me such a view of my miserable self, and what my innocent wife and child are suffering through my sin, that I want to try once more,—no, sir, not in my own strength. I find I have none, but in that of Him who is 'mighty to save,' 'a present help in trouble.' Will you give me another chance, Mr. Norton?"

"Indeed I will, Westbrook, very gladly. Come 'round Monday and I will put you at work. Meanwhile here is something to help you keep our dear Lord's birthday. He is, indeed, a 'friend in need,' and will be a strength sufficient for you."

"I am thankful that He has found me, Mr. Norton; and thankful, too, that He has given me a friend in you."

Again Philip Westbrook softly approaches his own door, signaling great caution to the lad who follows him with a load which he sets down in the corridor. Having again taken observations through the convenient crack, Mr. Westbrook quietly enters the room, and as he looks about him his heart, grown so tender in one short afternoon, bleeds with remorseful sorrow. Upon his wife's face four years have drawn deeper lines than would have been graven in a quarter of a century of happiness.

Her head still lies upon her arm on the table beside which she sits, but exhausted by her outburst of grief, she sleeps, drawing deep, sobbing breaths, which tell of the unforgotten woe of her heart.

But for the moment that poor little empty stocking appeals more powerfully to the father's heart than even his wife's distress, and he hastens to fill it,—candies and raisins, nuts and oranges, leaving space for only the feet of a gaily dressed doll which he contrives to perch on top of all.

Then he goes to his wife's side, and kneeling, passes his arm gently about her.

"Ada, my love, my dear wife, God has heard our little girl's prayer, and has answered it. Papa is himself again, and, with God's help, will never again come home cross and rough and stumbling. Forgive me, dear wife, for what I have made you suffer, and the remaining years of life which God may give shall be devoted to atoning for the past, so far as I may. And never again, God helping me, shall you weep on Christmas eve because you have nothing with which to fill your child's empty stocking."

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS.

BY CHARLES ROADS.

If in our cities it will impress us that there are really such people as children inhabiting a great city what a vast gain! One would think by all the arrangements of streets and buildings that the children all live upon another planet. Do I forget the school buildings? No! they are erected for little men and women, not for real, live children. Children play, but where is there any indication that the school architect ever knew that. Children like to talk and by this impulse to talk and ask questions can be best educated. Our schools are arranged for such little men and women as you would imagine are dumb. They are bad children if they talk, and get a low mark in their reports. They are punished if they overleap these senseless restraints and do talk. They are not so much instructed as incessantly examined. And that not by permitting them to converse with their teacher as by the stillness of the written method. No! not even the schoolhouses, magnificent buildings as they are, prove that we know there are children among us. And while the schoolhouse has no more signs of childhood's life and needs than the long and many windowed factory has, we see nothing but another factory. So many little bits of flesh not recognized as any different from older flesh are gathered in, the grinding begins, and the product a lot of silenced and mannish or womanish little folks come out.

Two little Italian children were "printing" their first English letters on a rough, greasy wall in their little court, See! "Keep off the grass!" This is the proof that the city knows it contains children but the city does not want them. Keep out of the stores unless they desire to purchase, keep off the streets for fear of the electric juggernaut, keep away from the flowers, keep off the grass! Alas! Even at home keep out of the parlor, for it is clean, keep away from the books and pictures, keep quiet!

Now, let us study the rights of children. First, they have unquestionably a right to play, We hold that it is self-evident that every boy and girl is endowed by the Creator with an inalienable right to have a happy childhood. To play freely, shout as loud as they please, run and tumble without constant peril from horses and carts, and trolleys and policemen, which are conveniences for lives after play time. The policeman, especially, is the terror of boys and girls who will play whether or no.

If now we declare for children their right to play, we must also pledge our lives and fortunes and sacred honor to maintain it. It will require a long fight in our large cities to secure children's playgrounds in sufficient number, dimensions and equipment to meet the needs. But there is no cause in the entire circle of reforms so hopeful of widespread sympathy as the cry of the children.—Christian Statesman.

CHRISTMAS IS COMING.

"Christmas is coming," the children cry,
Counting the weeks that are hurrying by,
Dear little children who live at home,
And do not guess what it is to roam,
From morn till night, with stockingless feet,
Up and down through the ice and sleet.

"Christmas is coming!" thinks little Tim,
But what can the Christmas do for him?
His home is a cellar, his daily bread
The crumbs that remain where the rich are fed.
No mother to kiss him when day is done,
No place to be glad in under the sun.

That wonderful fellow, old "Santa Claus,"
Who never is idle a moment, because
He is kept so busy with piling the toys
Into the stockings of girls and boys.
No wonder he sometimes forgets, you know,
Into the homes of the poor to go.

But, dear little children, you understand
That the rich and poor all over the land
Have one dear Father who watches you,
And grieves and smiles at the things you do,
And some of His children are poor and sad,
And some are always merry and glad.

Christmas will bring you many joys—
Food and plenty, frolic and toys;
Christmas to some will bring nothing at all,
In place of laughter the tears will fall.
Poor little Tim to your door may come,
Your blessings are many; spare him some!

The Christmas bell will sweetly ring
The song that the angels love to sing,
The song that came with the Saviour's birth,
"Peace, good will, and love on earth!"
Dear little children, ring, I pray,
Sweet bells in some lonely heart that day.

A CHRISTMAS STORY OF TWO CHILDREN.

BY L. B. SHRIVER.

THESE two children, Eddie and Fannie, were brother and sister who lived at Camelford, a little town about twenty-five miles from Philadelphia. They had been to the big city once when they paid a visit to Aunt Clara who took them all around, showing them so much that they were lost in wonder.

They thought it must be the whole world, for it was ever and ever so much larger than their town, and, as to stores,—why, "Kerling's" in Camelford was nowhere. Toy stores, candy and book stores were their delight.

But when Aunt Clara took them down Chestnut street to see "Kris," their joy was unbounded; they then knew for certain there was a "Kris Kringle," for "guess hadn't they both seen him walking about in a big store? and hadn't they been in the stores where he got all his presents for good boys and girls?"

Well, that very Christmas "Kris" brought Fannie "the very same" doll and set of dishes she saw in the store where he was, while Eddie had his wish, too, and good old "Santa" must have heard him, for on Christmas morning when he awakened, the first things his eyes rested on were the "very same" pair of skates and game of ten pins that he so craved.

Yes, "Kris" heard them, and was so good, for he brought them just what they wanted.

That was a merry holiday season, and our dear little friends often thought and spoke of it when home at Camelford.

Dear little innocent children! It was the last bright Christmas of their childhood, for the demon, Rum, had gained a strong foothold with their poor father.

Mr. Tompkins was a very worldly man, belonging to several clubs, and gradually the wine cup allured him from home and loved ones; he became careless about his business, and so cross that very often his dear loving wife had to shield her little ones, as their merry voices seemed to enrage him when under the influence of liquor.

Once dear little Eddie saw his father fall while coming to his home, and the little fellow, thinking "to help papa," ran to pick up his hat and help him to rise, but received only curses and a blow.

When Eddie reached home he went quietly up to his sister's room and poured out all his trouble to her. They both cried bitterly and did not know what to do to help dear mamma. They both saw and knew it was grieving that dear parent, for she so often had the headache and cried so.

But our good, kind heavenly Father was watching over his loved ones. One night Mr. Tompkins, with some of his so-called friends, had been to a political meeting and on the way home stopped in at several taverns; at the last they got into a quarrel, and the man who sold the vile poison was putting Mr. Tompkins out into the street when he fell and injured himself so that the next day he died, and his poor, patient wife and children were left alone and penniless. Kind friends came to their assistance and they were able to keep together.

Christmas was once more drawing near, and Eddie and Fannie often thought and talked of their holiday at Aunt Clara's two years before, and of good "Kris Kringle," and wished they lived in Philadelphia so they could "see the good old man again," and tell their wants to him; so one day Fannie said, "I do believe if we could get a letter to that dear old man it would be all right." Eddie believed so too; finally they thought of an old colored woman living near them. They were sure she could write for they had seen her put a letter in the postoffice, so off they started.

Aunty Beck was a kind, jolly old soul and entered into their plan at once. Yes, indeed, she could write, and if they would tell her what to say, they should soon have a letter for "Kris."

They only had a piece of brown wrapping paper but Aunty Beck said that was just the thing. She heard her "young Missus" say colored paper was fashionable, besides "it would not show the dirt," so she sat at the table with Eddie on one side and Fannie on the other, and this is their letter:

To Mr. Kris Kringle in Philadelphia:

DEAR MR. KRIS:—We are called Eddie and Fannie Tompkins. We live at Camelford. We saw you once when we went to Aunt Clara's in Philadelphia and you heard what we wished for and were so kind as to send us just what we wanted. You used to come to our house too, but that was when papa was a good kind papa, but he used to get drunk after that and beat us, then he was killed and now dear mamma has to work to take care of us. We are very poor. We wish you would come to our house this Christmas and help to cheer dear mamma up and bring her some flour and meat. Oh—and some wood, so she can be warm and not cough so much.

We would like lots of things too, but it would take lots of money, so if you will only give mamma these nice things we will do without and will thank you ever so much. We cannot write, so Aunty Beck is writing for us. Couldn't you bring her a little candy or something for being so kind to us? No more from your little friends,

EDDIE AND FANNIE TOMPKINS.

The letter was directed and taken to the postoffice; here a good lady whose little girl had gone to heaven, noticed the strange address, and thinking she would like to take Kris's place to some one's else little one, opened and read the letter. She wept when she saw how self-sacrificing these dear little children were and how they loved their mamma. She found out where they lived and visited them, and whilst talking with their mother found she was an old schoolmate of hers and the daughter of the good clergyman of their native town; seeing how needy they really were, she sent all, and more than had been asked for in the letter, so that Eddie and Fannie were sure their letter had gone right to "dear Mr. Kris Kringle."

Aunty Beck also believed it and often used to tell her grandchildren about "Mr. Eddie and Miss Fannie's letter to Kris Kringle."

A LITTLE four-year-old, named Eliza, has an older sister named Mary. On Christmas morning Eliza heard the greeting, "Merry Christmas!" exchanged between the different members of the family, and it seemed to her that sister Mary was getting the lion's share. She studied the matter for some time, in her quiet, wondering way, but not being able to see the reason for the usual form, she finally announced her bewilderment by asking: "Why don't somebody say Eliza-Christmas?"

A LITTLE fellow, turning over the leaves of a scrapbook, came across the well-known picture of some chickens just out of their shells. He examined the picture carefully, and then, with a grave, sagacious look, slowly remarked; "They come out 'cos they was afraid of being boiled."—Exchange.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Did you ever go to a Thanksgiving dinner where one thousand turkeys, five hundred mince pies, one thousand gallons of milk, a wagon load of fruit and candy and other things in proportion were eaten? I have been to such an one.

"Why," you say, "that sounds like a giant's dinner, were they giants at the table?" No, not giants, but Lilliputians of a giant city in such numbers that they could eat more than giants very easily!

I refer to the dinner given by one of Chicago's large clothing dealers, who, remembering the days when he was himself a homeless boy selling papers, treats all the city newsboys who will come to a yearly feast at Thanksgiving time.

When I reached the big electric-lighted store, I found the walks blocked with people who were looking in at the windows. In one of the windows several white-aproned men wearing white caps, were cutting up turkeys with big chopping knives.

Within the bright store the counters had been piled at one side to make room for the long tables which were already sperad for seven hundred boys. On each plate there were turkey, mashed potato and cranberry jelly. Rows of big, whole turkeys rested on platters down the center; there were great bunches of crisp celery, a variety of fruit, and delightful heaps of frosted cakes, tarts and pies.

Soon the orchestra began to play, the waiting crowds outside were admitted and the procession of newsboys, with here and there a girl, poured in and scrambled to their places on the long benches before the feast, some impolitely seizing cakes and fruit and filling their pockets. I was glad to see that hats were removed and some of the bigger boys helped the younger ones to places. Grace was not said but surely God's blessing rested on the meal!

A big clatter of knives on the plates told when they were empty, and the obliging waiters hurried to fill them up again, for there was to be no stinting and every hungry boy was to be filled till he could hold no more.

One little fellow near me with long, yellow hair and very dirty face, sat perfectly still and quite forgot to eat at first, he was so busy watching the unusual proceedings. Another boy waved a drumstick in the air to a friend at a distance and shouted, "Is my brother here?" On being told that this was the case, he fell to again with increased appetite.

While these first comers were being feasted, a patient crowd of youngsters stood in the street outside waiting their turn. Five times the tables were cleared and filled. Those one thousand turkeys, and great quantities of good things were all gone before ten o'clock at night, a good deal being carried in baskets to poor folks who would otherwise have had no Thanksgiving.

Now I said there were no giants at this dinner, but there certainly was one. Who was he? The generous man who gave the feast, of course! He was a giant Greatheart. May there be many more like him at the coming Christmas tide!

Your

Aunt Jane

CHRISTMAS.

There is an element of deep philosophy as well as of exquisite poetry in the fact that Christmas, whatever its rightful place in the year, has been put by tradition and by the consensus of opinion through long ages, in the very center of winter's cold and gloom. As Christ came into the world when its night was darkest, when there was least promise of hope, and when despair had well nigh conquered the hearts of the few who longed for a brighter day, so we celebrate His birthday at that time when it would seem as if there were least hope for the physical universe. When the skies are dark and gray, when cold and gloom reign over nearly all the Christian world, when vegetable life seems totally extinct; then, like another star in the East, is set this day on which we again bow before the manger of Bethlehem, and rejoice in that "Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," "the day-spring from on high" which "hath visited us."

Underneath that lesson which is dearest to the Christian heart, the lesson of a personal Saviour which lies upon the surface of Christmas day, there is another which we are apt to overlook in our gladness in that which is apparent, and that lesson is that light must come out of darkness, that no gloom can last forever, that no cloud can separate the all-Father from humanity, His offspring. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning," and joy, essential joy, is the very pulse of the Infinite life. Cold and gloom are but outer coverings of a warmth and a light which are eternal, and though the cold and gloom are sometimes turned toward us and we wonder, in our doubt, if they do not constitute the whole of life, yet they must in His own time be dispelled, and the eye which sees God can even in the midst of the darkest gloom look into that Heart where there is eternal gladness and a warmth which fills the universe.

The song which the shepherds heard upon the plains of Judea is echoing through the ages still. Its music has become sadly jangled, and discords have crept in through our human inability to strike the keynote of heaven's harmony, but even in the midst of our nineteenth century life, when the clamor and the bustle and the discord are most apparent, there are times when clear upon each ear sounds the same "peace on earth, good-will to men," and we realize anew that glory can be given to God only as peace and good-will are manifested towards men.

God grant that we may hear the song this Christmas-time more clearly than ever before; that from our own hearts may be driven all darkness; that we, too, may look up and find the air about us filled with angel visitants, and that from the glory of that vision we may arise and go to seek the Child born anew in our midst.

We worship and serve the Christ to-day only as we see Him, His image, His possibilities, in each one of His brethren. The pathway from the manger-cradle of Bethlehem leads to the door of every human life, and the message which comes to us on the day which celebrates His birth must surely be, if heard aright, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.

Christmas is already in the air. December has brought crisp days and quick steps. Even now boys and girls are lotting on a vacation, and the whole work-a-day world is counting a day off. The stores are hung with gay bargains, and crowded with eager buyers. Most appealing and wonderful letters are dictated to Santa Claus, and "expectation stands on tiptoe" in all the land. Why? Is it because of hallowed thoughts that cluster around the day? As the Sabbath-school children learn their sweet carols and prepare for the happy time, do they think more and more of the babe in the manger and that he came to help them to be good? Rather, are not their joyful thoughts centered upon the tree and old Santa with his big body, "that shook like a bowl full of jelly," and above all, his gifts for them?

Without being pessimistic, may we not inquire whether our observance of Christmas is most in keeping with what the day commemorates, or with pagan festivals? Does the Dutch Santa Claus, who, in early times was supposed to provide marriage portions for destitute maidens and to bring murdered children to life, and for whom the children of Flanders and Holland, and we might say all the world, now put out their shoe or stocking in confidence that Knecht Clobes, as they call him, will fill it before morning with a prize for good conduct,—does he well represent the One who gave to us the Saviour of the world? And, too, have we not come to value the day almost wholly for the gifts we receive, and have outgrown the simple ways when children expected just a little something at the great festival, and however small or inexpensive it was, it stood to them as a reminder of the great gift from the Heavenly Father?

Now, we must give to all of our circle, and is it not too often true that we give to those who already have an embarrassment of riches, and leave out those upon whom an inexpensive gift would confer great happiness and comfort? Has gift making not become an anachronism in this Christian nineteenth century? And candidly speaking is it not one of the "nagging worries" of Christmas times? Do we not often buy a thousand trifles for our thousand friends and look at them afterwards and regret their worthlessness, and often the fact that we spent too much for our purse?

Why not announce our intentions to give only to those who really need a helping hand, or who would at least receive and value a gift for the sentiment it brings and not because it cost so many dollars. Miss Willard has asked, "Why cannot we all agree with one another that at the coming holidays we will send no token except to those whom we can help to better conditions of everyday life by means of better food, clothes, shelter, furniture, adornments for the walls of their homes, happy thoughts to enliven and enrich their minds?" Are we ready to try this? If this custom were rooted and grounded among us it would easily spread and the world be made the happier thereby. Shall we begin this year and as far as possible make it a merry Christmas and a happy New Years to all

HELP FOR ARMENIA.

Letters from Marsovan say that after the massacre there the sight at the Armenian cemetery was ghastly. Corpses were brought by the wagon load and tossed upon the ground in heaps, the bodies having been rifled by the perpetrators of the slaughter, and then stripped of what poor clothing they had by "hyena-like hordes of barbarians."

The people at large are not interested so particularly in the political question of whether the integrity of the Turkish Empire shall be preserved or not, but they are deeply interested in rescuing the noble Armenians from unendurable outrages and in alleviating their sufferings as far as possible.

An Armenian relief committee, with the Duke of Argyle as president, and the Duke of Westminster and the Bishop of London as vice-presidents, has been organized in England.

But the United States cannot leave the relief of the Armenian solely to British hands. The greater number of missionaries resident in Armenia and other Turkish provinces are of American birth. American spirit and example have stimulated the Armenian spirit of independence. In this crisis it is our duty to aid.

The American Armenian Relief Fund Committee, on which are Bishop Potter, Archbishop Corrigan, Morris K. Jesup, and other well-known people, asks that contributions should be sent to Spencer Trask, 27 Pine street, New York city.

The following appeal, sent to England through Lady Henry Somerset, comes with equal force to the women of America. In a letter accompanying it Lady Henry says it was signed by many names which for obvious reasons are suppressed. She closes as follows:

"This heartrending document speaks for itself. Will English women be deaf to the voices that call to them in the hour of their supreme agony? Will they not rise and demand that such steps be taken at all hazards as will secure the rescue of this tortured people?" The Armenian appeal is as follows:

To Lady Henry Somerset, England,

Dear Lady:—We, the Armenian women of Constantinople, who a few days ago lost in the terrible local massacre our sons and daughters, our husbands and relatives, in our deep consternation and terror beg of you to be our interpreter in our unspeakable suffering to the humane women of England, who have already expressed their feelings of pity and sympathy for our fate. We used to tell each other the terrible condition of our brothers and sisters in Armenia, how they were dying under the persecution of Islamism and tyranny, the details of which are found in English papers. But now we, ourselves, are in that hell on the earth. Even in the streets of Constantinople fanatical Softas, bloody Kurds and savage Turks, with the assistance and guidance of so-called policemen and soldiers, who are born devils, tortured and massacred en masse our dear brothers and husbands in the presence of thousands of witnesses. Even women and children have been murdered brutally. Thousands of Armenians have been thrown into prisons, and died there by torture. The blood of innocent men and women ran through the streets of Constantinople. Those who thought that the English papers exaggerate the suffering of our brothers and sisters in Armenia, must be ashamed of themselves when they read the horrible details of this massacre, corroborated by thousands of able and trustworthy witnesses. Alas! what crimes have been committed. If in this metropolitan city such abominable horrors happen, what can be the condition of our Armenian brothers and sisters in the unknown corners of Armenia?

We cannot express our feelings, we cannot describe our suffering. Words fail us. We believe, had you been present here to see our misery and terrible condition; or, God forbid, had you been in danger every hour—even every minute—to be massacred in cold blood by the hand of a fanatic, or to be subjected to tortures one thousand times more terrible than death, you, the English women, would feel more and would be more ready to help us.

Once we had a hope, now growing feebler, that the great nation of England would help us, and our miserable condition would be at an end. We saw in the dark clouds the bright rays of our freedom. But, alas! how short has been our delight. The hand of the tyrant fell upon us more heavily; all hope of deliverance is gone; why do they not tell us to die or to accept Islamism and drag out our miserable life in mosques and harems. O God! is there no other salvation—to die or to be Islam?

Dear Lady, we have heard that you spoke in the grand meeting of May 7, and other places, with pity and sympathy for our cause. We believe you will do your best now in our present critical condition. The women of England worked miracles in England and elsewhere. To you, who are the most renowned representative of the worthy women of England, to you who have such a tender heart and who work to alleviate the misery of the human race, to you we appeal and ask help for our misery and persecution. You, women of England, use your influence so that your great nation, which is bound by treaty and moral obligation to free our nation from persecution and torture, shall work to help us while there is yet time, because a few months hence you will not find an Armenian nation to help, and your conscience will forever torture you that you ought, you could, and you did not help us.

Your Suffering Sisters.

WHITE RIBBON SENTIMENT VERSUS YALE.

Mrs. Poteat's utterance in a public audience in regard to being unwilling to send her boy to Yale University has been widely published and upon invitation she has given her reasons therefor. She says among other things: "The University Club (for juniors and seniors) has its bar; 'could not meet expenses without it.' I have seen a young man coming out of its building carried by two friends in a helpless state of intoxication. The secret societies have drinking places, the so-called best element thinks moderate drinking no very serious matter; the Yale dinner, whether of a board of undergraduate editors or a triennial reunion or a New York banquet is incomplete without its wines. Last June the graduating class of the scientific school went to a local shore resort and celebrated. A city paper described what occurred under the title, 'Inferno at Savin Rock.' Some of the things done at that orgy would make New York brothels blush."

Mrs. Poteat quotes a prominent alumnus as saying that over a hundred of his class at graduation were more or less addicted to intoxicants. She speaks of the gambling on athletic contests and notes the discouraging fact that New Haven and other papers publish the betting, the odds offered and the amounts lost and won with the most matter-of-fact commonplaceness. She quotes the Yale News of November 16 as saying, "excessive drinking, gambling and dissipation unquestionably exist here."

These things and the fact that New Haven has four hundred saloons open to Yale students without any apparent restriction against their patronizing them; at least three of them conspicuous ones in the center of the city, securing their patronage in large part from the undergraduates, and one of them catering exclusively to upper class men, —all of this and other particulars are named as reasons why she does not wish to send her boy to Yale.

What Mrs. Poteat says cannot fail to impress white-ribboners alike by its subject matter and by the fact that the writer is a daughter of one of our most honored women, for many years president of the Boston union. Mrs. Poteat's position is only a logical outcome of her birth and training. The daughter of Dr. A. J. and Maria Gordon could hardly fail to take the stand she has done upon a question so involving morality and righteousness.

The protest is most vigorous and yet so just and kindly in spirit that we feel assured the most zealous Yale advocate cannot fail to be impressed by its spirit and to recognize the need which calls it forth.

It is certainly high time that the mothers of this nation should lift up their voices against the corruption of their sons, however that corruption be disguised by respectability, culture and high caste. A place where "excessive drinking, gambling and dissipation unquestionably exist," by the testimony of its own paper, cannot be a safe place for young men. Mrs. Poteat has done a favor to womanhood in this protest, and, if the great college have but "ears to hear," she will have done a favor to Yale as well.

The idea that great universities have the power to create their own moral code is one of the barbarisms of the past which the age is rapidly outgrowing. The right to arrogate to themselves dictatorship has long been denied to church and state, why should it still be conceded to these intellectual hierarchs?

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union should take a decided stand upon this crying abuse and should demand, in such a way as can leave no doubt of its meaning, that the culture of the intellect and the culture of the moral nature must be alike considered by college boards, and that no university shall have a right to be considered "great" which is great in intellectual advantages only, and not great in all that makes for righteousness.

THE DRUNKARD TAKES HIS TURN.

A student of the temperance reform finds no more significant change in public sentiment than that which proposes to deal with the drunkard as one who commits a crime against society. The drunkard maker has long been regarded in that light by temperance people, but they have been perhaps too lenient toward the "finished product" of the liquor business. The studies of Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson and other famous experts have proved that alcoholism is a disease, while the studies of religious and ethical experts have proved it a crime against both natural and spiritual laws. Now comes the statesman and his position is that the drunkard is an enemy of society and an unmitigated nuisance and danger in the home. He, therefore, proposes that the state shall found industrial homes in which drunkards shall be detained by order of the court.

England has already gone a long way toward securing such a law. It has passed the House of Commons and the next Parliament will undoubtedly place the subject before its members.

The Austrian government is about to introduce a bill which proposes to treat the drunkard as a person mentally incapable and likely to inflict injury upon the community, not only by actual violence but by example, and to provide for him a term of detention which is to be two years with power to extend or diminish the time according to results. For ourselves we believe in the "Do Everything Policy" for the drunkard. We favor the Keeley Cure, the Christian home for inebriate men (that of Dr. Thompson in Chicago being an excellent example), the gospel meeting, the temperance pledge. All of these are helps that should be gratefully recognized by those who are trying to deliver men from bondage. We hold as we have always held, to the gospel cure as the only complete deliverance, and we believe this view to be founded on a philosophical basis, which has perhaps never been better expressed than by Dr. Horace Bushnell in his well known phrase:

"The expulsive power of a new affection." For when the love of God dwells at the center of a man's being, it works out through all his senses, habits and manner of life, uplifting, purifying and cleansing all.

But we confidently believe that a house of detention where men might "sober up" would help them to perceive more clearly the infinite power of a Christian life to take them out of bondage. We also believe that to arrest the drunkard, no matter what his social position, and to place him in custody, would greatly deter the ignorant and thoughtless from looking lightly upon such a brutalized condition, and would thus be of incalculable service in stamping the drunkard with the displeasure of the community in which he moves.

Holding these views, we shall never cease to urge upon the women of the W. C. T. U. their duty to use their utmost power to induce the legislatures of our respective states to pass these laws of detention under the name of the "Habitual Drunkards' Acts."

We all know that the winter preceding a presidential campaign is one in which we are not likely to get much legislation against the liquor traffic, and we shall show our good sense by making special efforts this winter to secure legislation against the drunkard, not only for his own good but for that of his family and all those who have to deal with him, and we most earnestly commend this special line of work to the white-ribbon constituency of the United States, for on this subject we intend to "cry aloud and spare not," "no matter who will hear or who will forbear."

MR. THOMANN DEFENDED.

Mr. Henry D. Billings writes to say that an injustice was done Mr. Thomann, manager of the Literary Bureau of the United States Brewers' Association, in an article in THE UNION SIGNAL of October 10, under the heading, "The Brewers' Representative at the Temperance Congress." After quoting from the article named, Mr. Billings goes on to say:

"The impression naturally conveyed by the article in THE UNION SIGNAL and by the quotation from Mr. Malin is that Mr. Thomann has deliberately misrepresented facts. Mr. Thomann has been a prolific writer for many years in the interests of what he believes to be real temperance. He has been exceedingly careful to give full credit to those who differ from him, and it does not seem right to convey the idea that he has wilfully made statements which are incorrect."

THE UNION SIGNAL certainly is in accord with the gentleman when he further says:

"You and I differ very widely as to prohibition, but I am sure that we agree upon one thing, that nothing is gained by misrepresenting or distorting facts, and that it should not be lightly assumed that people who differ from us are less honest in their convictions than we are ourselves. There should be no difference between Prohibitionists and liquor dealers as to what are provable facts, however widely we may differ as to the inference to be drawn from those facts."

THE UNION SIGNAL can assure Mr. Billings that its aim is to publish facts only, with constant fairness to friend and foe alike, and that no injustice was intentionally done Mr. Thomann. The difference is in this case, as in most others, largely a difference of definition. Mr. Thomann claims Massachusetts as a non-prohibition state, whereas Mr. Malin claims the larger part of it as practically under prohibition law through local option. That this is true, it seems to us no candid person can deny, but we are quite willing to concede that Massachusetts is in no sense a prohibition state when taken as a whole. Mr. Thomann was undoubtedly correct as to the letter of the statement; we believe Mr. Malin to have been equally correct as to its spirit. As regards the prosperity attendant upon no-license territories in comparison with license, we would refer both Mr. Thomann and Mr. Billings to the official statements made by the cities of Cambridge and Brockton as to their respective standings under the two régimes.

BEER ON ELLIS ISLAND.

Mr. Stump, the commissioner of immigration, says that there is no water on Ellis Island except cistern water, which becomes brackish; that the "soft" drinks for sale, such as ginger ale, soda, etc., are distasteful to immigrants; that most of them are accustomed to the use of beer and light wines as part of their daily nourishment, and that it was thought that the granting of the privilege of selling beer, if properly guarded, would result beneficially and protect the immigrants from deleterious drugs. He invites investigation and says if any abuse of the privilege of selling beer is found, or if it is shown to be prejudicial to the cause of temperance, it will be revoked.

The italicised words show how far the commissioner is from knowing or believing that there is alcohol in beer and that a little creates an appetite for more, and from knowing what the word temperance has come to mean.

Mrs. Grubb, superintendent department of work among foreigners for the W. C. T. U., says that she has not found the water objectionable, and that the immigrants have no opportunity to indicate what kind of drinks they prefer, but that many of them have been known to deprecate the fact that beer is the first thing they meet in this country.

The W. C. T. U. does not complain that "the sale of beer is abused" as has been quoted, but that the sale of intoxicants is in itself an abuse of governmental privileges, that the immigrants are for the time being the wards of the nation, and ought not to be exposed by official act to that which is regarded as deleterious and injurious in its influence and effects.

At Christmas time from clime to clime,
Each star to star doth sweetly chime.
Till all the heavens are ringed with rhyme.
Then loosed above, a note thereof
Floats downward like a wandering dove
And all the world is ringed with love.
—John B. Tabb.

The old-fashioned pound party is being revived in England in the interest of philanthropy, with this modification,—it is called "Pound Day," and a notice similar to the following, is placed in the local papers and sent out to friends throughout the country.

"It is proposed to have an annual 'Pound Day' for this home, and we have fixed upon September 29. Will all our kind friends send on that day to Miss ——, a pound of something—tea, sugar, rice, cheese, currants, jam, soap, candles, black-lead, soda, pins, wool or a pound in gold or silver? Please help us, but avoid perishables."

Might not the local union have a day once a year on which it asks for gifts?

We are often asked, what is the best single book on prohibition, and recently submitted that question to our editor-in-chief, who said: "I can give the best proof of my faith by my works, and I have carried a twenty-five cent book published by Funk & Wagnalls, 30 La Fayette Place, New York, and entitled, 'Prohibition, the Principle, the Policy and the Party,' ever since its publication."

The following letter from Rev. Duncan C. Milner, pastor of Armour mission, Chicago, is a sample of numerous ones received on the same subject:

DEAR MISS WILLARD:—I wish to thank you for what you have said as to the matter of coöperating with Roman Catholics in temperance work. It seems to me amazing that Christian temperance people should have any doubt about work of this sort. In my two years' work in Chicago I have had quite a little of this kind of kindly coöperation. I was a member of the executive committee for the observance of the Father Mathew day, and have had more than one address by Catholic priests in our mission, and rejoice in the thought that the signs of the times are so favorable for the unity of Protestant and Catholic in our holy war.

Sincerely yours,
D. C. MILNER.

The New England Conservatory of Music, of which Miss Willard is a trustee, held its annual fair early this month at Hotel Vendome, Boston. Mrs. Livermore was president of the fair, and she and Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and Mrs. Richard H. Dana were the reception committee. The list of tables suggested preëminent devotion to domestic matters.

The Citizen, published at Harvey, Ill., edited by Mrs. Lucy Page Gaston, had part of its apparatus torn up soon after the injunction against the saloon was granted. People can draw their own conclusions. It is understood that the fight against the sale of liquor in Harvey could hardly have been made without the Citizen. Rev. M. H. Lyon and the brother of Mrs. Gaston were among those who helped financially and otherwise, and it comes to our ears that Miss Willard took a hand in it by sending a bank check.

Apropos of the last paragraph but one in the Watch Tower of November 28, is an extract from the Minutes of the last New Jersey W. C. T. U. convention: Whereas, magazines and daily papers constantly present among their illustrations, and art galleries force upon our attention pictures and other representations of nude and insufficiently draped figures, and whereas, it has been conclusively proven that such pictures exert a debasing influence, and whereas, we realize that the production of each of these pictures requires the posing of an undraped model, thereby destroying the God-given sense of modesty in some human being, therefore resolved, that as an organization and as individuals, we will not hesitate to express our abhorrence of such pictures, and will endeavor to educate public opinion on this subject.

MISSOURI.

THIRTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The charming little city of Butler entertained our thirteenth annual convention, November 5–8. One hundred and thirty delegates were present; enthusiasm and earnestness characterized every session.

Our state president's return from Europe, the pleasant visit of Mrs. Helen M. Barker, the reunion of the clans, a splendidly arranged program and the cordial hospitality served to heighten the enjoyment.

The stars and stripes waved lustily from business houses; those talismanic letters, W. C. T. U., were displayed in coffee, sugar, and various other articles, even in doughnuts in the baker's window. The opera house in turn was elaborately and tastefully decorated with potted exotics, banners and insignia of our organization.

Tuesday evening was devoted to the addresses of welcome, cordially given by Mayor Clardy, Rev. W. D. Blair, Hon. S. P. Francisco, Rev. Lotspeich and by the president of the union, Miss Frey. The response was made in a very charming manner by Miss Harriet Williams, of Cameron.

After these exercises the delegates and friends were received by the general officers and Mrs. Belle Kimball, state superintendent of parlor work, at the home of Mrs. J. W. Morris.

The convention proper began Wednesday morning with a beautiful consecration service, led by Mrs. Rebecca Hall, our state evangelist. The devotional hours throughout were marked by that deep spirituality so helpful in its influence over other exercises. Routine business was disposed of with our leader's usual neatness. Miss Ellen D. Morris, our faithful corresponding secretary for eight years, made her report, in which every phase of the work was brought to notice in a concise, earnest way.

The memorial services for twenty departed ones were conducted by Miss Lillian Wood, who spoke tenderly of those who had left our ranks. Mrs. W. E. Walton sang "The Holy City" at the close of this service. As the last note died away no applause could have been so eloquent as the appreciative hush that fell upon the audience.

"News from the field," by organizers, Methods of promoting our principles by superintendents of Y work, Work among Foreigners, Colored work, Sunday-school, Our State Paper, and a number of three-minute speeches from district presidents occupied the afternoon.

Our president's address delivered Wednesday evening, delighted a large audience. It was a unique description of her past year's experiences, the impressions gained in her trip abroad, a broad, comprehensive view of the whole field of work. Each year binds Mrs. Hoffman closer to the hearts of Missouri women and her messages strike responsive chords. It is, therefore, a delight that she has consented to stay in the state this year. "Impressions of other countries," was the subject of Mrs. E. B. Ingalls' splendid account of her World's Convention trip.

Speeches by district presidents, reports of state and county fair, prison and jail, parlor meetings and other departments, an instructive paper on "Schools of Methods," by Mrs. S. F. Grubb, the free parliament upon duties of officers, etc., conducted by Mrs. Helen M. Barker, filled Thursday full to the brim. Mrs. Barker filled the evening with a delightful address on "The Duty of the Hour," which not only pleased her hearers but sent conviction to many hearts and won recruits for Butler union.

Friday was truly "our busy day," and was prefaced with an address on "The White Cross Band," by Rev. J. B. Welty, general secretary of that department. Strong resolutions were adopted, finance discussed, pledges made and much miscellaneous business transacted. The election resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Clara Hoffman; vice-president-at-large, Mrs. S. F. Grubb; corresponding secretary, Miss Ellen D. Morris; recording secretary, Mrs. Kate F. Newton; treasurer, Mrs. Julia A. Glazier.

Six young ladies contested for the diamond medal Friday evening, each acquitting herself with credit.

Other features of this evening was an address, "The Little Prohibitionist," by Master Harry Potts, a prospective candidate for president of the United States on the "Home Protection" party ticket in 1920, song service by children, the charming rendition of Ben Hur's "Chariot Race," by Miss Harriet Williams, of Cameron, the rare vocal selections by quartette, the stereopticon display given by Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, who also furnished the same for the National at Baltimore, and last but not least, the tribute to William Jennings Demorest, by Mrs. Hoffman, who closed by presenting the medal to Miss Nellie Punshon, of Mound City, to whom the judges awarded it. "Thumb Nail Sketches," subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and our state paper were prizes awarded to the other contestants.

Thus closed a most profitable and instructive convention, the memory of which will stimulate the determination to make greater efforts this coming year.

PENCILINGS.

St. Louis gets the convention in 1896.

Mrs. Mary E. Jones, of Humansville, one of the tried and true, died November 10. White-ribboners of Missouri are in sorrow.

Kansas City Central union celebrated its fifteenth anniversary, November 2. This union was organized by Miss Willard and has a history of achievements.

Brookfield, Dexter, Holden, Louisiana, Cole Camp send splendid accounts of enthusiastic temperance sermons, Sunday-school mass meetings, etc., on November 24, World's Temperance Sunday.

Mr. D. S. Crumb, of Bloomfield, sends twenty dollars to our state treasury, saying it gives him "great pleasure to contribute to the cause to which so many women give so much."

St. Louis district is striving to get all ministers to offer at least one sentence each Sunday for railroad employés. This district is just now agitated over the expulsion of a large number of insurance companies, represented by F. Hirschberg and brother, from St. Louis Board of Underwriters because F. Hirschberg has a woman solicitor.

UTAH.

THE ROUNDING UP.

Through some misunderstanding as to the date some of the delegates failed to reach the territorial convention of the W. C. T. U. held at Ogden, in the First Presbyterian church, hence, only a few were present but all who attended felt that "it was good to be there."

Friday afternoon was spent in the appointment of committees. The evening was given up to the ministers of the city who addressed the convention and to Mrs. Hunter's report of the Home of the Friendless.

Saturday morning the committee on credentials reported, seating all delegates and all members of unions present as members of the convention. Mrs. Telford, of Colorado, had spent September in Utah lecturing and organizing W. C. T. U's, so that reports, excepting from Salt Lake, Ogden, Provo, Manti and Mount Pleasant, were of newly organized or revived unions. The reports were very encouraging and showed either good work done or else departments in good working order.

Then followed the address of our beloved president, Mrs. G. W. Martin, of Manti, full of encouragement.

Mrs. Davidson, of Mount Pleasant, read a most excellent paper on "Mothers' Meetings." Mrs. Bonham, of Provo, conducted the noonday prayer-meeting, after which the convention adjourned to the basement of the church to partake of a bounteous dinner generously furnished by the Ogden union.

After dinner the convention accepted an invitation to drive to the Home of the Friendless. We found the home neatly kept and very pleasant. The kindly looking matron is a member of the Salvation Army. The home has been entirely supported by donation. Salt Lake City recently appropriated fifty dollars per month to the home in order that they may have the privilege of placing their homeless and betrayed girls in so secure a place. As the home is owned and controlled by the Ogden union they may well be justly proud of their effort.

Upon returning to the church, the convention proceeded to the election of officers and department superintendents. Mrs. Martin was unanimously reëlected; the remaining offices were then suitably filled. The president delivered a charge to the newly elected superintendents that they would not fail nor neglect their duties. The invitation from Provo for next year's convention was read and accepted. A vote of thanks was extended to the Ogden union for their hospitable entertainment, and the convention adjourned to meet at Provo next October.

Rev. E. O. Taylor, of Chicago, Ill., has been lecturing in Salt Lake, Ogden and Logan during the early part of November. His clear, logical and forcible manner of presenting "Alcohol and the later Science" and "That Boy of Yours" arrested the attention of even the most thoughtless. His influence for good will be widespread and lasting, as he visited the university, the colleges, academies and schools. He addressed the Y. M. C. A. of Salt Lake on "Christian Citizenship."

RHODE ISLAND.

COMING OF AGE.

Rhode Island W. C. T. U. has reached and passed that important crisis in life, her twenty-first birthday. The event was celebrated in annual convention at Woonsocket by casting her ballot, not as formerly into a contribution box, but with due form and ceremony into a ballot box.

The result was a greater success than we imagined. Three hundred fifty-six votes for four officers were recorded in fifteen minutes, and, best of all, each of the four officers had one hundred and eighteen votes, the entire number recorded! This unity of spirit pervaded the convention. There was no friction. Discussions were carried on and business transacted briskly and pleasantly.

Mrs. Paine welcomed the convention in her own happy way, by saying it had the evidence of a hearty welcome in the church in which it was gathered. Rev. A. B. Lorimer spoke for the church, and Mrs. M. S. Howes, of Newport, responded to the addresses in a charming manner. She said we were parts of a wondrous whole, but we were individuals in our work. If you cannot be a knife that cuts, be a whetstone that will sharpen a knife that can cut. If you cannot be a speaker of power, as you might wish to be, be a helper to urge another on to the work you cannot do. Miss E. P. Nichols read her review of the year's work. She introduced this report by saying there were no reasons why any woman should drop out of the ranks, but many reasons why thousands should join the W. C. T. U. With 1,062 licensed retail liquor saloons and sixty-five wholesale dealers in Rhode Island, there was work for all Christian women.

This was the dark side, but as she summed up the work of our unions it was an encouragement to each worker to see that while her own part had seemed so small, the aggregate amounted to a great deal in building up public sentiment.

The convention was favored with the presence of Mrs. H. D. Walker, a National evangelist and one of our own workers, who gave a noon-hour Bible reading. Her talk centered around the thought that "The battle is not ours, but God's." Our guidance should come from Him and then there can be no mistakes. If any work should be well done it is the Lord's work.

The work of the police matrons deserves special mention, both because of its importance and because of the efficiency and consecration of those appointed to these trying positions. I should be glad to quote at length from the reports of these women, and it must indeed be a heart of stone that would not be touched by the tales of shame and woe which they can tell.

The freewill offering, as conducted by our "Sister Sunshine," Mrs. A. M. Paine, was a very pleasant service, and the whole amounted to over $230.

As usual, our president's address was a fine production, clear in its teaching, practical in its suggestions and earnest in its tone. We give God thanks for so wise and faithful a leader of our white ribbon army.

A noticeable feature of this annual meeting was the presence of so many of our younger women. The evening addresses of Miss E. U. Yates and Miss Clara Parrish were clear and convincing. Miss Parrish is so fully consecrated to the service that we felt it a great privilege to have her at two of our Y conferences. Miss Deborah Knox, who is a power for good, gave very helpful Bible lessons and stirred up a real interest in the affairs of the Temple. Other young women had their place on the program, and faithfully performed the duties assigned them. The pastors of Woonsocket adjourned their meetings to attend the convention.

The children's hour was very attractive, and the little folks showed splendid training. On the last evening a number of the L. T. L. came in ragged clothes and sang, "There's a Shadow on the Home," while others formed in line carrying the white ribbon above their heads and singing "We are Coming to the Rescue," marched to the platform, where they encircled the other group. The whole was suggested by the Albert Hall group, and was well carried out.

The treasurer's report showed that we have added about ten per cent to our membership, and reports from the unions told of good work accomplished and increasing interest. Altogether, this was declared to be "the best convention of all," and the Woonsocket union had our heartfelt thanks for their untiring efforts in our behalf.

OKLAHOMA.

SIXTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The reporter was absent from the annual convention which convened at Perry in October, but from the reports of the convention she has evolved the idea that the "new woman" is in Oklahoma, and of course belongs to the W. C. T. U. Our president, Mrs. M. H. Switzer, was placed in the position to call forth all the latent powers of this new creation to "hold the fort." She faced a large and intelligent audience the first evening, without a delegate from abroad or an executive officer present, and the speaker to respond to the welcoming addresses absent.

These addresses were from Hon. Lewis Flynn, who spoke in behalf of the territory and city, and Mrs. McKnight, for the Woman's Relief Corps. Mrs. Amelia Mentz, president of Perry union, expressed the sentiment of the union in a beautiful address entitled "Perry's Gladness."

Hon. Lewis Flynn is the Republican member of Congress from this territory. He praised the W. C. T. U., and urged all persons to give the organization their moral support. He said the only way to stop the liquor traffic was for the government to enact a law prohibiting the manufacture of liquor. He further said he was not in favor of woman suffrage, but if women ever had the franchise, it would come to them from the party to which he had the honor to belong.

Mrs. Switzer, without a moment to prepare, gave a brilliant and witty reply to all; among the many good things she said was, "that the men had always had all the responsibility in the government and the women had borne the consequences, that the W. C. T. U. would like to see the women take the responsibility and the men the consequences for awhile."

Although the representatives were few in number a true spirit of the work was manifested throughout the deliberations, the Lord raised up speakers and workers. Preachers, lawyers, doctors and judges came to the rescue and filled the place of absent ones. Mrs. M. Lee Hoyt, of Arkansas city, was present, and by special request read a very able paper on "Woman's Work." The memorial hour for "our beloved," both National and territorial, was solemn and tender. Reports of the superintendents of the twelve departments taken up by the territorial union showed much faithful and earnest work done.

A parliamentary drill, by Judge Boles, of Perry, was instructive and helpful. The report of treasurer showed that we were not "Looking Backward!" The president's address was thoughtful and earnest.

The convention was held in the Christian church, which was appropriately decorated. A globe suspended from the ceiling had bands of ribbon white encircling it. Our mottoes had conspicuous places and the picture of our chieftain rested on an easel among many other fine collections.

Perry union deserves much praise for the earnestness manifested in entertaining the convention, it had only been organized three months. The union held Demorest contests and other entertainments for the purpose of raising money to pay the expenses of the convention. It met all the debts, which were heavy, and had money left in its treasury. At the public meetings good collections were taken for the territorial treasury. The citizens also at a public meeting invited the convention to Perry next fall, and when the ides of next October roll around, the W. C. T. U. expect to go up to the "Queen City" and take possession in the name of the Master.

Mrs. Switzer declined reëlection, as she soon expects to leave the territory. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Amelia Mentz, Perry; recording secretary, Mrs. M. E. Oliver, Perry; treasurer, Mrs. C. C. Cail, Oklahoma City.

The Perry Daily Enterprise gave full reports of the convention each day. We believe this is the first time this courtesy has been extended to the W. C. T. U. in Oklahoma. The musical program exceeded all others and was most delightful, the opening song was original, composed by Mrs. L. D. Treman of Perry, embodying a noble sentiment of temperance and patriotism. It was entitled "Oklahoma," and sung to the tune of "Red, White and Blue."

NEW YORK.

AUTUMN LEAVES.

My last letter was a report of the state convention for which the general news had to step aside.

There are two policies pursued in the state, one being to hold the county convention just before, the other to hold it just after the state convention, so of late we have been constantly breathing convention air but it has been full of stimulating temperance ozone.

Albany county leads with a quarterly convention. The motto of this capital county seems to be, "What is worth doing (at all) is worth doing well," and as a preface to the convention five mass-meetings were planned. For each of these an order of exercises consisting of Bible readings, music, recitations, discussions and addresses was arranged. The meetings were largely attended, new unions being the result.

The convention was held at South Westerlo with representatives from all parts of the county present, and a great interest manifested.

Genesee county held its annual at Pavilion. Some of the special features were a symposium, "What is License," a discussion upon "The Oughts of County and Local Officers." the helpful Bible reading given by Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, and the admirable report of the World's Convention, given by the president, Mrs. Anna E. Rice.

At the Oneida county convention held at Westmoreland, Mrs. Fessenden, of Massachusetts, delivered an address, subject, "The Government's Responsibility for the Liquor Traffic;" Mrs. N. A. Graves, of Boonville, spoke to the young people the second evening, subject, "A Square Talk," but it proved to be an all around talk in regard to a symmetrical life. Mrs. Theodosia M. Foster, known in literary circles as Fay Huntington, is the gifted president of this county, and through her tact and zeal the cause is advancing as the routine work of the convention demonstrated.

Next door neighbor to Oneida is Madison county; at Canastota its workers met in convention. Mrs. Fessenden also made an address here. Miss Adelia Hunt gave glimpses of the World's Convention. Stirring papers were read, the crown of all being the president's address, which was a history of the W. C. T. U. work of the county during the decade. Mrs. E. C. Bushnell was reëlected president.

At the no-license town of Philmont, Mrs. M. C. Powell marshalled the temperance women of Columbia county. An encouraging feature of the work of the past year has been the organization of new unions and a large increase in membership. John G. Woolley gave one of his eloquent addresses. Governor Morton was commended for his stand in reference to the Temperance Educational bill. The action taken by the teachers at the State Teachers' Association was deplored.

The convention of Ulster county at Gardiner was too short for the good things crowded into the days. Mrs. Wesley Hale gave the detailed report of the great gathering over the water which Mrs. Burgess graphically supplemented. Mrs. Emily L. McLaughlin of Boston, made an address. Among the resolutions was one in approval of Theodore Roosevelt's stand for the preservation of the American Sunday, and one pledging the W. C. T. U. to use every effort to prevent the repeal of the mandatory law for scientific temperance instruction.

The seventh annual meeting of Schenectady county was held at Glenville with the unions largely represented. Mrs. Martha A. Clowe still leads the women as their president.

Montgomery county is our youngest sister, but she is growing. Her first annual convention was held at Charleston Four Corners, and was a day session only. Like all young women, she wished to look well, and so decorated in "white and gold."

Schuyler county women assembled at North Hector on Seneca Lake. The work in this county is in a flourishing condition. One of the pleasing things reported was the unusual promptness of the unions in sending dues.

Livingston's county convention was held at York. The unions were nearly all represented, and the departments of work heard from. The question-box proved an entertaining and able instructor. "The children's hour," writes my reporter, "was like a play spell in the midst of a serious day's work." The symposium on scientific temperance instruction was a valuable feature of the convention.

Tompkins county was the first to hold a convention after the state meeting. This was preceded by a "white-ribbon rally" at Ithaca, both of the state secretaries being present, adding interest with song and speech. Twelve of the fifteen unions were represented. Mrs. Graham conducted a song service in the evening in place of an address, singing the gospel of temperance into many hearts.

Just here I wish to speak of these song services. They were inaugurated at the state convention of 1894, and since that time "music has been in the air" all over the state. Miss Willard, in her address at Baltimore, recommended a white-ribbon choir in connection with the local unions; if we cannot have these there is certainly in each state a consecrated temperance voice, which can be used to advance the cause.

The unions of Meridale and Meredith united at the village of Meridale in entertaining the semi-annual convention of Delaware county. The presence of Rev. Geo. Post, the veteran Prohibitionist, added interest. A pleasant episode of the occasion was the attendance of the school children in a body for an hour. They were addressed by the L. T. L. superintendent.

Oswego county held its eighteenth annual convention at New Haven, November 1 and 2. Mrs. S. M. Barker, the president of the county, is a born general. The exercises were of the usual order. The singing, however, was of a higher order, as Mrs. Graham's song service occupied the principal part of the evening.

I wish again to refer to the beautiful state history, "Two Decades." Christmas will soon be here, and no more appropriate or beautiful gift can be made to a friend than a copy of the little book. Kindly order early.

News in a Nutshell

MRS. BENJAMIN is soon to hold a school of methods in Willard Hall.

THE Ensign Y of Cleveland, O., celebrated a harvest home festival recently.

ECHO meetings of our recent great Convention have been held by unions in all parts of the land.

MR. JOHN G. WOOLLEY will be at home in Chicago, where he has several engagements, during the holidays.

THE women of Phœnix, Md., were stirred, November 2, by the talk of Mrs. Charlton Edholm, World's superintendent Florence Crittenton Missions, on social purity.

MRS. HELEN CAMPBELL writes THE UNION SIGNAL: "I am delighted to-day to read that Miss Willard wants room made for Catholics and Hebrews in the W. C. T. U."

THE Malden, Ill., W. C. T. U. have paid deserved tribute in fitting resolutions on the death of a worthy and faithful collaborer and county officer, Mrs. Owens, of Princeton.

ALL those who know her will sympathize with Mrs. Emelie U. Burgess, of New York, in the taking away of her son, William P. Burgess, November 3. Just entering manhood, of a deeply spiritual nature, he gave rich promise of a fruitful life.

A VERSE to send out with birthday bags:

This little bag is designed to hold,
As many pennies as you are years old,
But if you are modest and care not to tell,
There's another plan that will work as well.
Just add to the sum, till your sister seers
Shall think you have lived for a hundred years.

THE Lansing, Mich., W. C. T. U. held a Sunday afternoon mass-meeting in memory of Mrs. Emery, November 9, for which one thousand invitations by card were sent to laboring men. The union was gratified by the presentation of a picture of the departed National superintendent, framed in white and gold, the gift of the National W. C. T. U. president.

MISS C. S. BURNETT, recently appointed National lecturer for the department of narcotics, has since then given five public lectures on the subject, addressed one company of public school teachers, one Sunday-school convention, one college, four high schools and over thirty public schools. She visits all schools in all towns, and is everywhere well received. Miss Burnett is also now National organizer.

THE Festival of the Holidays was given November 12–15, by the West Philadelphia W. C. T. U., to secure a fund towards a permanent home for the union. A neat, four-page sheet well filled with advertisements was issued daily during the festival, giving brief sketches of the origin and observance of the festival days and also an outline of the work of the W. C. T. U. The enterprise was commendable, well planned and is a most suggestive one for local unions.

THE following is from a personal letter from Miss Kate Lunden, superintendent of Scandinavian work, which shows how forcefully the war is being carried on in that quarter: "I was in New York last week; held two meetings in Brooklyn and spent one night in the slums. The New York girls have carried the white ribbon into the enemy's camp and have the testimony from the saloonkeepers that they are 'worse than the Salvation Army.' Five of us, all girls, were out almost a whole night. We prayed with a weeping sailor boy on the pavement in front of old 316 Water St. and proved quite an attraction on the Bowery. We got permission to hold meetings at any time at a boarding house down in notorious Cherry street, where there are over a dozen Scandinavian saloons on two blocks, and the union is going to hold a Scandinavian meeting every month in the Seamen's Mission on the West Side. The girls have worked in the slums all summer."

MRS. MARY STROBRIDGE CONWELL recently died in Evanston, Ill. (age seventy-eight), where her family have some of them resided for nearly thirty years. At the age of seventy-two she graduated as a student of the Chautauqua course. From the days of the Crusade Mrs. Conwell was a leader in Illinois, and through her efforts the gospel temperance meeting was established in Evanston which has continued for twenty years. Two of her sons, Rev. George E. Strobridge, D. D., and Rev. Thomas R. Strobridge, are well known ministers, and these, with her son-in-law, Rev. J. M. Barclay, of Detroit, Mich., by her request, conducted her funeral services and carried her casket to the cemetery. She forbade her friends to wear mourning and a white sash upon the door of her daughter's home gave notice that death had opened the gate upward for her. She was a woman with more than ordinary gifts and her interest in the affairs of church and state grew stronger with the years. Her faith in God was the basis of her character and helpful life.

MRS. TELFORD, president of Colorado W. C. T. U., writes: "I wonder how many of our women know of the blessed personal work (in a quiet way) being done by one of our National organizers, Miss Ida Clothier, in her home in Manitou, Col. This state is made up of people from every section of the country, and many a brave girl has sacrificed everything to bring some loved one to its healthful climate in search of a few more years of life, and forgetful of self she too breaks down and needs just the few weeks of rest that Miss Clothier is trying to give. She has already freely given this help to young women from ten states and has under serious difficulties carried very heavy burdens which would make even older hearts quail, and it seems to us here that our white ribbon women the country over would be glad to unite with friends on December 16 in going without one meal and sending to Miss Clothier the few cents that meal would cost, with an earnest prayer for the continued success of the home physically and spiritually. This would not take from any department of work and would enable her to reach many another life."

To Avoid Delay. When the secretary of a union sends in the name of the superintendent of literature she should be careful to state whether this is the first superintendent of literature the union has had or if the former superintendent (giving her name) has resigned and the new one been elected in her stead.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

DEAR SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS:—Temperance Sunday has passed. We have put forth vigorous effort to secure universal observance of the day, sending out thousands of suggestive programs and other helpful material.

Our hearts have been cheered by the favor with which the movement has been received on every hand by churches and influential bodies. The impetus given by the action of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church was gratifying. Following this the National Triennial Council of the Congregational churches at its recent session in Syracuse adopted resolutions endorsing the movement and pledging to recommend to their churches the observance of the fourth Sunday of November as annual Temperance Sunday.

Reports are coming in from the annual conferences of the M. E. church, all of which are encouraging and give added assurance of the ultimate success of the plan for a universal Temperance Sunday.

We recommended to some of our workers in large cities that calls for temperance sermons and the general observance of November 24, be made through the press signed by leading ministers of different denominations. These resulted in much good in that the temperance sermons were printed in Monday morning papers.

We desire now to get the news from the entire field concerning November 24, the first annual Temperance Sunday. Let local superintendents or secretaries send reports of all special work done to their respective county, district and state superintendents. Report number of temperance sermons preached, temperance rallies, concerts or mass-meetings held, literature distributed, pledges taken, and any items of interest concerning the day.

State workers are urged to gather these reports and place them on file for reference at the close of the year. We ask all Sunday-school workers to aid us in the matter of statistics. Blanks are prepared for use by the secretary of Sunday-schools and local superintendents. A supply will be sent to state superintendents for distribution.

We would call attention of local workers to the fact that about January 1 is the time when subscriptions for Sunday-school supplies are renewed. This is your opportunity to secure yearly subscriptions for temperance papers. Send at once for sample copies of the November issue of The Young Crusader, published by the W. T. P. A., and for Youth's Temperance Banner and Water Lily published by the National Temperance Society, 58 Reade street, New York. Present these and any other temperance papers desirable for Sunday-school use to the superintendents and ask their consideration.

Let us push all lines of Sunday-school work this year. At noontime may our prayers ascend in behalf of this blessed work for the children.

Yours for the Master,
STELLA B. IRVINE,
Nat. Supt.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS DEPARTMENT.

The school savings banks work is having regular onward movement this year, and unions that have not taken it up are cordially invited to send for leaflets on the subject; to read and distribute facts of this simple, practical and popular teaching that makes the school children rich in pennies saved, rich in economy learned, rich in daily business habits inculcated, rich in self responsibility fostered and generosity made possible.

School directors and bankers see at once the utility of the savings system in the schools and readily coöperate.

The school time occupied in collecting and caring for the pennies of the pupils, who wish to deposit to their future credit, is only about fifteen minutes per week. The teachers usually enter with zest into the work, which is business training for both them and the scholars.

The roll is called for the collection only once a week, on Monday mornings. The money is sent immediately to bank. Each child has always in hand receipts for every penny, which is likewise credited on the roll book. When a child has fifty cents he is given a bank book, and the bank allows him interest when his amount reaches three dollars. The deposits are wholly voluntary, and money can be checked out as seems advisable to child and parent, but foolish expenditures are discouraged.

Our boys and girls are thus alike property owners, and happy in independent possession when they go out from school life, of from twenty-five to two hundred dollars as their opportunity and disposition has been to save. Systematic saving makes systematic giving possible. Understanding, honest, possession is the very groundwork of self-responsibility, individuality and generosity. We are proving this daily in hundreds of our public schools.

Write, enclosing ten cents, for statistics and literature and learn more fully about the work.

The 1,600 boys in Girard College have had advantage of this system for three years, and the president of that institution speaks as highly of it as does our United States Commissioner of Education, Hon. W. T. Harris. School superintendents and teachers have but one voice in the matter, that of harmonious accord.

Will you not, sisters of every local union, bring this school savings banks teaching to the notice of your school boards?

To each one sending me a two-cent stamp I will mail "How to Institute School Savings Banks," that she may hand it as a Christmas gift to some school director or teacher.

Extravagance begets crime, poverty and drunkenness. We want to lift humanity toward the light, especially at the recurring beautiful Christmas time.

With hearty proffers of ready explanations and help at this holiday and all other seasons I waft you to every corner of our broad land of work Christmas and New Year's blessings.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

To My White-Ribbon Comrades:

In God's providence my lot seems to be cast indefinitely in this beautiful but remote section of our land, thus withdrawing me from the great maritime center, where for twelve years, as a National superintendent of W. C. T. U., I have been established. My expectation of returning to New York this fall failing to be realized, made it impossible for me to do justice to our "defenders" by sea and land, so I have given up the position.

The executive committee at its recent session, chose a lady for my successor distinguished for her ability and fidelity in the same line of work in New Jersey. Mrs. Ella M. Thacher will, I am sure, meet your expectations in earnest loyalty to our "boys in blue," also in fertile schemes for their elevation to a higher plane of living. She is especially favored in belonging to a state which has always done valiant service for the army and navy, as well as in her vicinity to the great metropolis, which has been, and ought ever to be, headquarters for our important department.

Let me therefore commend Mrs. Thacher to your loving coöperation, trusting the same kindly courtesy may be extended to her that you have shown to your comrade and associate. SARAH A. MCCLEES.

DEPARTMENT OF NARCOTICS.

We are very anxious to have a new Anti-cigarette League button, and I offer five ($5) dollars premium for the best design. Conditions,—the button must be made at a retail cost of not more than five cents. All designs must be in my hands before January 15. Committee on awards, Mrs. Gleason of Massachusetts, Mrs. Holm of Maryland, and Mrs. Bradley of Michigan.

Sunday, February 1, has been set apart as narcotic Sunday. I hope state superintendents will coöperate and have this day generally observed. Every local union is urged to invite all ministers to preach on this day. Also ask Sunday-school superintendents to give a program pertaining to this line of work. Short essays by pupils, and recitations are interesting.

After a Sunday devoted to this department Anti-cigarette Leagues can be formed where none exist, and where the leagues have been formed, they will be strengthened.

I ask local unions to begin plans at once.

THIS is the way work is beginning in one state whose president writes: "All through this month our counties are holding executive committees, L. T. L. days, making plans for colored work and increasing membership. A course of lectures in each large town is being arranged. Eight prominent workers are now in the state. I will do all in my power for Miss Lunden to find out where the Scandinavians have churches and open the way for her. We are going in for our best year. All agree that the Baltimore Convention was a most happy and helpful one." Why not a letter like the above from each state president?

Cor. Secy's Notes

Miss C. S. Burnett has sent a report of her first month's work as National organizer, and it is a most excellent one, comprising one district and two county conventions, the organization of five unions with an addition of over one hundred membership to the state, day meetings with twelve unions, addresses before three Sunday-schools and two Endeavor societies, besides giving her lectures, "A Month Across the Atlantic," and "Narcotics," three times each. She has also presented the subject of narcotics before one Sunday-school convention, one company of teachers, one university, four high schools and thirty-six public schools, reaching over 2,500 pupils, and taking over fifteen hours actual speaking. Lectures on all subjects have numbered thirty-four. This argues well for Miss Burnett and for the organization in the coming year.

Little Rock Y tried an experiment last year, which I very much wish all Y unions could follow. They appointed a Y secretary to work up organization in the city in the same way the Y. M. C. A. secretary attends to the work of that organization. Miss Mary Campbell Smith, of Illinois, took the position of secretary and served in that capacity for seven months, until failing health made it necessary for her to resign. In that time she doubled the membership, thus, as the narrator wisely says, "doubling the income," and "brought the work before the public in a womanly, Christian way, making friends for herself and the cause among all classes of people." I can see no reason why this plan is not feasible for all large cities, and earnestly hope it may be tried.

Mrs. A. E. Carmen, of Chicago, is planning a W. C. T. U. medal for oratorical contests. They are to be conducted upon the same basis as the Demorest and Cooper contests, but are in no way antagonistic to these nor intended to intrude upon their province. It is believed by Mrs. Carmen and others that there is a field quite outside of the province of either of these two, which could be covered by W. C. T. U. contests. The recitations would not be confined to prohibition, though by no means ignoring that. The whole of our diversified work would be included within the range of the recitations. Mrs. Carmen's plan is already meeting with great encouragement, and we believe this method of creating sentiment will increase in popularity as the months and years go on.

Mrs. Rice asked at Baltimore that plans be devised to incite the state unions to work for L. T. L. membership this year with the same heartiness they work for W. C. T. U. membership. After consultation and learning Mrs. Rice's own thought, the general officers have decided to say that Miss Willard will go free of expense to the convention of that state having the fewest local unions without active L. T. L's. In case anything unforeseen should prevent Miss Willard's going, one or the other of the general officers will redeem this pledge. The old L. T. L. banner will go to that state making the largest per cent gain in L. T. L. membership, and in addition to this it has been decided to give the custody of the white-ribbon star-spangled banner to that state putting the largest amount of L. T. L. dues into the National treasury. It was announced in THE UNION SIGNAL a few weeks ago that this banner would be given in custody to the state making the largest per cent gain, but in reconsidering it was finally decided that that point had been already covered in the former offer, and therefore it is withdrawn, and "Mother's Banner" will go where mother's effects usually go, to the children. Both Mrs. Rice and the general officers are exceedingly anxious that the work of the L. T. L. shall be advanced this year as never before. We hope, for the love of the little ones, as well as for the future of our organization, all states may become loving emulators in this contest.

The National Minutes are progressing as rapidly as possible. There has been some delay incident upon the fact that it was necessary for Mrs. Hoffman to go to her state convention immediately after the National Convention, and that in that interim the W. T. P. A. had undertaken additional work, which it was necessary to crowd as rapidly as possible. Now, however, there is nothing in the way, and we are promised both the Minutes and the Annual Leaflet, copy of which has already gone in, before Christmas. Those of you who have ordered Annual Leaflets will please take note that last year's supply is exhausted, and that just as soon as the new ones are out, these orders will be promptly filled.

Headquarters has been a busy hive for the past month. The press department necessarily largely increases our work, but the working force is augmented, and therefore we hope to accomplish more than ever before. I am planning to spend the holidays and the greater part of January in Massachusetts, not on a vacation, however, except during the holidays themselves, but to attend to some important writing in connection with our work which can much better be done away from the office than in its bustle. The details of the work will go on uninterruptedly, and all important letters will be forwarded to me. I am already having calls for engagements en route and can make a few others if desired.

We are planning to send organizers into the South as fast as the way is opened by Miss Willard, and are confident that we shall roll up such an aggregate of new members as will surpass any previous record. We are relying upon the help of each officer, state, district, county and local and also upon that of each individual white-ribboner. The Convention will probably be held on the Pacific Coast. We cannot decide the city as yet because of the delay on the part of the railroad authorities, but set your faces toward the setting sun and resolve that there shall be such a record at the annual "round-up" as shall make us all glad.

Treasurer's Corner

Edward Everett Hale says Miss Willard's annual addresses are worthy to place beside any President's message. These addresses are being sent out in large quantities each day, and will soon be gone. Remember, it will only appear in an abridged form in the report, and those who wish the entire text must order soon.

The National Report is in the hands of the printer, and will be ready for delivery about holiday time; it will expedite our work in getting them to you if your orders come in promptly. The report is 15 cents, Miss Willard's address 25 cents.

The new Annual Leaflet will soon be ready for distribution, and will be sent out for the postage.

East Washington and Ohio have sent dues. The Woodbridge and Lathrap fund have both been remembered by Mrs. M. C. Teed. Self-denial by Mrs. I. F. Stoddard and the Endowment fund by Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman.

The colored work of the National is very generously remembered again this year by a contribution of $25 per month from that philanthropic woman, Miss Sarah J. Eddy, of Providence, R. I. This, with Miss Willard's personal donation and other sums she has succeeded in securing, brings the amount up to $700, which is a good keynote to strike for this department.

Let us all remember the young lady who has just attained her majority, and lay aside of our Christmas money something to put in Miss National's stocking. The idea of an endowment meets with universal favor, and holiday time, when we are in the gift-giving mood, is a good time to put the inspiration into effect.

Helen M. Barker

Organizers' Corner

We were surely all glad we came to "Baltimore, 1895," and the earnest white-ribboners of this city were wise enough to arrange meetings the week following the National Convention, before the enthusiasm died away, where it was my privilege to speak for two old unions and organize three new ones. One of these a Somerset Y of sixty-eight active and three honorary members in the State Normal School. Going from Maryland to Atlanta I heard our Mrs. Stevenson, Mrs. Beauchamp, Mrs. Sibley and Mrs. Nichols ably present our work on W. C. T. U. Day of the Woman's Congress at the Exposition. My next point was Mobile, Ala., where I held two meetings, tried to interest the mayor in appointing a police matron, and helped what I could. I reorganized a union of a few brave women in Montgomery, who have at least one consecrated, cultured clergyman to help them.

In Prattville and New Decatur, we had enthusiastic meetings and the Alabama state convention at Huntsville was a grand success. The state president, Mrs. Martha L. Spencer, presided with dignity, ability and tact. Reports were most helpful and encouraging, and the loyalty and intelligent earnest efforts of our Southern sisterhood is inspiring. The president's address was comprehensive and practical, showing a wide knowledge of our work and its needs. My address was kindly received and I was made to feel so much at home that I forgot I was "Away down South in Dixie," which we all so heartily sang at the National.

Turning my face homeward I stopped long enough in Asheville, N. C., to speak for their rescue home and then came here to resume my work in "Maryland, my Maryland." Thanksgiving day, bright and beautiful, we dedicated a handsome new W. C. T. U. Hall at Forrest Hill, about thirty miles from Baltimore. Sitting just in front of the platform, which was tastefully decorated, was seated the Junior Order of American Mechanics, who had brought a large American flag to present to the W. C. T. U. The state president of Maryland, Mrs. Mary A. Haslup, presided with her usual ease and ability. After the address and appeal for funds to pay the small indebtedness on the Hall, the large audience gathered in front of the building to see "Old Glory" fastened to the immense liberty pole just put in place for that purpose. As the stars and stripes waved out over our heads, the choir sang "The Star Spangled Banner," and the beautiful corner-stone was laid, on which was carved the following inscription: "Forrest Hill W. C. T. U., November 28, 1895." After a few engagements here I go home to await further orders for "God, and Home, and Native Land."

your child

A large number of diseases in children under 10 or 12 years of age could be prevented if only they had more power to resist disease. You note the difference in children. Some have nearly every ailment, even with the best of care; while others, far more exposed, pass through childhood unharmed. The first lack resistive power. Weak children: pale children: thin children: children who have continuous colds in the winter and poor digestion in the summer: children who do not prosper, need a fat-producing food, alteratives and tonics.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with hypophosphites, is for them. The best fat-producing food is a fat or an oil; the one most easily digested is cod-liver oil.

FINGLE: "There goes a woman with a history."

Fangle: "That female who just left your office? How do you know?"

Fingle: "She worked for an hour trying to sell it to me."

JACK had been to the barber-shop with his father. On the way back he asked: "Was that charlotte-russe he put on your face?" "No, my son," was the reply; "that was lather." "Oh!" said Jack, "I wondered why you let him whittle it off without tasting it."

MR. E. CONOMIE—"Did you write to that man who advertises to show people how to make desserts without milk and have them richer?" Mrs. E. Conomie—"Yes, and sent him the dollar." "What did he reply?" "Use cream."

AN Irishman, struggling to get on a pair of new boots, exclaimed: "I shall never get 'em on at all till I wear 'em a day or two."

PARKER—"What do you think of that proposed amendment to the state constitution?" Barker—"Which one?" Parker—"It provides that every law enacted hereafter must state distinctly whether it is intended to be enforced or not."

J. Walter Thompson, the New York advertising agent, has surpassed all his former efforts in the publication of his annual catalogue. Besides containing a select list of newspapers and periodicals of the highest order of merit as advertising mediums, it contains a hundred or more pages devoted to advertisements of the same, each in turn displaying elaborately the special advantages from the standpoint of the publisher. These pages show ingenuity and artistic skill of a high order—in short, a beautiful panorama is beheld as one page after another passes in review, and even the advertising expert is forced to admit that never before has America seen so interesting and so attractive a collection of advertisements of American publications.

AN engineer saying the life of a locomotive was only thirty years, a passenger remarked that such a tough looking thing ought to live longer than that. "Well," responded the engineer, "perhaps it would if it did not smoke so much."

WIFE (waking suddenly)—Olympius, what's the matter? Young professor (of athletics)—Where are the matches? "What do you want of them? What are you getting up for?" "I've had a frightful nightmare. I want to write it down while it's fresh in my mind. We need a new college yell."

GUPPINS—Billings, you look as if you had been losing sleep. Billings (whose room is just above a music teacher's)—I have. I suffer untold misery at night from chronic guitar.

A Wonderful Discovery—Catarrh and Consumption Cured.

There is good news for our readers who are victims of Lung Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption, in the wonderful cures made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Andral-Broca Discovery. Write to the New Medical Advance, 67 East 6th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and they will send you this new treatment free for trial. State age and all particulars of your disease.

DEALER—Can't I sell you one of these stylographic pens? The price has come down to a dollar. Scribbler—Is that so? Now, if you can pursuade the ink to come down, I might buy one.

AT the tomb of George Washington at Mount Vernon, a lady had just picked up a pebble from the walk to carry home with her, when a workman came up with a wheelbarrow full of gravel, which he dumped on the spot. "Have you—have you fixed up the place that way recently?" the lady asked in a slightly apprehensive tone. "Bless you, miss," was the reply, "we has to do this about every two weeks, so as the tourists can have something to carry away for momentums."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

All canned and preserved fruits should be kept in a cool, dark, dry place. Sealed ever so closely, standing in a warm place will cause fermentation. The light will change the color of canned fruits and jellies to a darker and muddier color than that which is the pride of a good housekeeper.

The peanut as an American product is receiving considerable attention of late among the teachers in cooking schools, one of them going so far as to construct a complete menu for dinner from this generally undervalued product. One of the simplest recipes given is for peanut sandwiches. Moisten some chopped nuts with rich cream, and season with salt. Spread this mixture between thin slices of bread.

An exchange gives the following: Peanut Caramels:—Boil together one cup of molasses, one cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter and one-half cup of milk, stirring constantly to prevent burning. When the candy is brittle in cold water pour into a well greased tin containing one cup of peanuts.

---

Peanut Crisp:—Melt one cup of sugar, stirring all the time. Have ready a cupful of chopped peanuts, and as soon as the sugar becomes caramel stir them into it. Pour into buttered tins to cool.

A correspondent says she saw in one of the Responsive Readings that camphor can be dissolved in sweet oil, and is going to try it so as to do away with alcohol for that purpose. The oil may dissolve the gum, but it would be a very unpleasant mixture for many of the common uses of camphor, bathing the head, for instance. Will not some one of experience in this particular give us a better solution?

It has been asked, "Can we not find a substitute for alcohol for cleaning nickel?" The question has received prompt attention from our readers. One says sapolio is an almost perfect article for that purpose where rust has not eaten into the surface, in which case there is no remedy. Another uses concentrated lye, and recommends soda for cleaning tin. Still another says chalk mixed with ammonia is the best thing she has found for cleaning both nickel and silver. Rub the article with the chalk preparation, let stand a few minutes, rub with a soft flannel and a fine polish is the result.

A cooling and refreshing drink may be made by boiling cranberries in water, two measures of water to one of berries. Boil until the juice is thoroughly extracted; sweeten with one-half pound of sugar to a pint of juice, and bottle hot. Serve in the same manner as raspberry and currant shrub. To many people cranberries are more healthful than apples, and their medicinal value is quite as great. They are a natural blood cleanser.

A recent number of The American Kitchen Magazine gives the following excellent recipe for entire wheat fruit cake: Beat one-half cup butter to a cream, add gradually one and one-half cups of sugar (fine granulated). To the butter and sugar add one cupful currants and seedless raisins cut in halves. Beat one egg very light, add one cupful thick sour milk, stir into the first mixture. Lastly add two cupfuls fine entire-wheat flour, one-third cupful pastry flour, one saltspoonful salt, one-half teaspoonful soda and heaping saltspoonful of ground mace sifted together. Bake about half an hour in small round cake tins. This amount makes eighteen little cakes. When the cake is firmly set, baked but not quite browned sufficiently, sprinkle granulated sugar over the top and return to the oven for the final browning, or sprinkle powdered sugar over the top of each cake before placing in the oven.

A HUNDRED YEARS OF MISSIONS; OR THE STORY OF PROGRESS SINCE CAREY'S BEGINNING. By Delavan L. Leonard, D. D., associate editor Missionary Review of the World.

This new book is not intended to serve merely as a book of dates or reference. Its design is not to tell a little about everything pertaining to the mission fields, but rather to tell enough about the most important and characteristic features and events in the history of the mission work of the century to meet the wants of the multitude of readers. As Dr. A. T. Pierson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World, who writes the introduction, says: "The outline of thought covered in this 'Hundred Years of Missions' is unique and has been followed in no other book of which we know. There will be found here a review of the century's work in this and other lands, which will both instruct and invigorate the reader." It is packed full with history and crowded with interest and will prove of especial value to the young people's societies of America, all of which are taking up missions for study.

TWENTY-FIVE LETTERS ON

ENGLISH AUTHORS,

For Teachers, Literary Clubs, and the General Reader.

By MARY FISHER. 12mo, cloth. 406 pages. Price $1.50.

This work treats of those eminent writers who for more than five hundred years have most influenced the thought of the world. The author makes the reader acquainted not only with the character of their works, but, what is of greater interest, with them as men—what they felt and believed, their way of looking at life, and their experiences.

The work is a departure from its class in its omission of the hackneyed judgments which pass from book to book; its fresh, telling matter, from original sources; and its special notice of the effects of weak and vicious literature upon young minds—its mission being to inculcate a taste for the "best that has been thought and said in the world."

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

This is a book marked for its simplicity of style and its directness in clear statements of the literary characteristics of eminent English authors, from Chaucer in 1400 to Mrs. Humphry Ward in 1891. Such a broad field can give only epitome sketches, but her characters are wonderfully clear in their delineation. She does this not so much in words of her own, but allows each to speak, and thus clothes each in living character; what each thought and believed; how they lived and acted and labored. The reader will seldom find more of positive value in such small space, told more vigorously and pleasingly, than in the neat, compact volume. Teachers and literary clubs will find the book boundlessly suggestive—inviting to wider fields—while the intelligent, thoughtful reader will find richness upon every page. It is not often a book of the kind is more deserving of full commendation.

Signal Notes

The Postmaster-general of the United States has issued an order forbidding postmasters to pay any money orders drawn to promoters of lotteries.

It is stated that there are four million young people in the United States, mostly under twenty-two, who are members of the various Christian young people's societies.

There has been a considerable decrease in the number of immigrants entering the United States during the past year. The smallest number is recorded since 1879—258,536.

Civil service in the United States has had another triumph in the order of President Cleveland, which brings the service of fourth class postoffices under non-political and common sense rules.

More than two hundred and thirty ministers, representing all sects in London, spoke on Citizens' Sunday in the interests of Christian citizenship. The necessity of applied Christianity in city government was strongly urged.

Miss Mary E. Robertson, of Ontario, Cal., is a graduate of the Theological Seminary formerly at San Fernando, Cal., and now located at West Los Angeles and a part of the University of Southern California. Miss Robertson graduated in 1891 and took first honors.

An electrical dish-washer is among the many ingenious labor-saving devices now on exhibition at the third Labor Exposition in the Palace of Industry at Paris. This unique contrivance with its system of brushes can wash and rinse two thousand plates an hour.

The Episcopal convention which met recently in Minneapolis set a noteworthy example in its adoption of the canon which reads: "No minister of this church shall solemnize the marriage of any person who has a divorced husband or wife still living, but this prohibition shall not be held to apply to the innocent party in a divorce for the cause of adultery or to parties once divorced from each other seeking to be united again."

A new International Sunday-school Lesson committee is to be chosen by the International Sunday-school Association at its triennial meeting in Boston, which will be held June 23–26, 1896. The lessons for 1896 will be for the first six months the Gospel of Luke, and for the remainder of the year in Old Testament history from the times of David and Solomon. The theme for the entire year of 1897 will be the history of the Early Christian Church as given in the Acts of the Apostles.

The Church Temperance Society of New York city recently sent its secretary, Robert Graham, to England, for the purpose of studying plans for temperance barrooms. On his return he submitted a design for a large model temperance saloon suitable to New York city. In addition to this enterprise the society is planning to increase its number of lunch wagons and coffee carts, which supply hot coffee and refreshments to cabmen, and to establish a system of lunch pavilions in suitable localities.

The seventeenth conference of the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations which met at Brussels this fall, discussed proposed rules for an international treaty of arbitration and did not forget the drink evil as related to the natives of Africa. An earnest appeal was made for their freedom from the pernicious liquor traffic by entire prohibition where possible. This appeal is to be presented to the several European powers having possessions on the Dark Continent.

Madame Antoinette Sterling, the white-ribbon minstrel, has returned to America, her birthplace, after an absence of twenty years. Her delight at being once more "beneath the starry flag" is unfeigned. She will tour this country, singing in all the leading cities. Her initial appearance was made at the Pioneers of Woman Suffrage Reunion in New York recently, celebrating the eightieth birthday of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. It is not generally known that the unique personality and rich contralto of Madame Sterling inspired Sir Arthur Sullivan to write the well-known music of "The Lost Chord." Many notable song writers have written songs for her. A rare and deserved compliment in the form of a farewell concert was paid her on the eve of her departure from Europe by a number of titled, literary and musical friends.

Bridget—I'm going, mum!

Mrs. Hiram Daly—Why, Bridget, isn't this sudden?

Bridget—I don't know, mum; I've been t'inking about it all ther marnin'.

Elsewhere in this issue of The Union Signal is a watch advertisement headed, "It Costs Nothing," that is, the watch is forwarded to any address in the United States free for examination. The watch has been examined, and found to be just as represented, and good value for the money. Readers need have no hesitancy in forming business relations with this firm.

Wife—What makes you so late to-night, dear? Husband (with indignation)—I've been arrested. Wife—Arrested? Husband.—Yes. I bought an umbrella to-day and marked on it, "Stolen from H. Smirk." The first policeman I met arrested me. I told him my name was Smirk, but he wouldn't believe me.

A group of people were discussing the merits of a former pastor, the weight of criticism being on the unfavorable side. One of the number remarked: "Well, I don't think he was much of a preacher, anyway. I never could get interested in his sermons;" and then appealed to an aged official brother expecting sympathetic answer. But she was immediately silenced by his reply: "Well, sister—, the poorest preacher that I ever heard could preach so much better than I can live that I never feel like criticising a minister."

A new, pleasant and profitable employment has recently been developed in which women in all parts of the country are taking a live interest. We refer to the Non-Alcoholic Flavoring Powders, which are finding favor in almost every temperance family where introduced. ## SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

A resolution in behalf of Armenians has been introduced into Congress by Senator Call.

Pittsburg is the place and May 27 is the date of the National Prohibition Convention.

It has been decided to hold the National Republican Convention in St. Louis next June.

Famous travelers and missionaries have held a three days' Congress on Africa at Atlanta.

A new joint traffic association (or trust) has been formed including all the leading railroads of the United States.

Sabbath, labor and temperance reforms are advocated by the National Reform Association which met in Baltimore Thursday.

Georgia legislators have been aroused by the report, Thursday, of its penitentiary committee on the outrageous abuses of state convicts.

The recent closing of the socialist unions by the German government brought out an inflammatory speech by a German socialist, causing great excitement in the Reichstag, Thursday.

The American Federation of Labor has voted against the passage of the compulsory arbitration bill. The free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 was supported, and also one against capital punishment.

WE hope UNION SIGNAL readers will be swift to respond to the Red Cross appeal given on another page.

A COMMENDABLE reform which is rapidly gaining ground throughout the country is that of the free text-book system in public schools. Ten states have already made this compulsory and nine have made it permissive. The advantages of the system are many, and for reasons that are obvious, compulsory education laws must remain largely impracticable until pupils can be furnished the necessary text-books free of expense.

THE National W. C. T. U. was represented in the convention of the American Federation of Labor in New York by Mrs. Mary T. Burt, president of the state W. C. T. U., Mrs. Dr. Stuckenburg, National superintendent of the department of capital and labor, Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, superintendent of the department of purity in literature and art, and Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, general secretary of the Young Woman's Branch. Each addressed the convention, and it was voted to publish the speeches of the first two in the official organ of the Federation.

OUR third and fourth round-the-world missionaries, Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, are once more at home in Evanston after five years of almost continuous travel and engrossing labors, broken only by brief periods of relaxation and two hasty visits to this country. Rest has now become imperative, and they have made no plans beyond the recuperation of mental and bodily energies. The interest and tender sympathy of all their coworkers can be best manifested by refraining from even the written expression which would involve for them a wide correspondence. Due notice will be given through THE UNION SIGNAL whenever they are ready to again take up the God-inspired labors to which their lives are consecrated.

THE first Red Letter Day of the new year is the birthday of Madam Willard and is fittingly called Mothers' Day. All unions which are carrying on the regular department work of mothers' meetings will, we trust, hold a special meeting on Mothers' Day, January 3, at which the life and work of that "great mother," to whom all the world owes a debt of gratitude, shall be the prominent thought; while unions which have not yet taken up this line of work could not find a better time to begin. No higher tribute can white-ribboners pay to the memory of their beloved and revered 'Saint Courageous" than by observing her natal day in special effort for the elevation of the standard of motherhood. Send to the W. T. P. A. for the leaflet, "Suggestions for Mothers' Meetings," by Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, state superintendent of this department for Illinois, and follow the plan as therein outlined.

WE learn that some points in the statement which preceded the protest of the Boston union in our issue of December 5, were hardly warranted by the facts in the case. We were led to make them on this wise: The protest, with Miss Willard's reply, came to us unaccompanied by any explanation and we did not hear, personally, from the then secretary, now president, of the Boston union until after publication. But a newspaper dispatch from Boston had stated that, of the committee of four appointed by the union, two, Mrs. A. J. Gordon and Mrs. M. E. Cheney, had refused to serve, not being in sympathy with the protest. From this we drew the natural inference that Mrs. Cheney had signed only in her official capacity. We have since learned that she was in sympathy with the subject matter of the protest, but doubted the advisability of making it public. We regret if we have occasioned Mrs. Cheney's position to be in any way misunderstood and hasten to make the amende honorable.

WILL unions and individuals replying to the letter of the general officers concerning the Temple, please remember to address Miss Willard at Room 1118, the Temple, Chicago, and not at Evanston. Do not send currency except by registered letter. Send remittances by check or post-office money order, and make payable to G. B. Shaw, treasurer.

FOLLOWING is the W. C. T. U. memorial presented to the National Prohibition committee at its session in Chicago:

To the members of the National Prohibition Committee, greeting:

At the recent Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a motion was made by Mrs. Mary E. Metzgar, of Moline, Ill., and unanimously passed that, in view of the coming contest in this quadrennial year, the W. C. T. U. appoint a committee to consider definite action along political lines. The General Officers of the National society, with Mrs. Metzgar, the original mover, and Mrs. Margaret B. Ellis, superintendent of legislation and petition, were appointed that committee, and three of the number have the honor to wait upon you to-day.

Recognizing as we do that the Prohibition party is the only party which has thus far stood for the principles we advocate, and recognizing, also, that we are carrying on lines of work in direct harmony with the great mission to which you are called, we feel that there should be a closer coöperation between us. We, therefore, tender you anew our best service in the coming campaign, and earnestly ask that you will not only look upon us as allies in your work, but will use your utmost endeavor to further the principles we represent.

We would respectfully call attention to a resolution passed at the Baltimore Convention that the name of the party be changed to "Home Protection," inasmuch, as that, to our thought, represents all that is contained in the word Prohibition, with an almost infinite meaning beyond of strength and support and uplift for the home, which is the heart of our national life.

We also request that you will, in the coming campaign, give all due prominence to that plank in your platform which declares for the enfranchisement of woman, and her taking her place side by side with man in this our war "For God and Home and Native Land." And, also, that you will give greater prominence to the relation of poverty to the drink habit, and seek more earnestly the release, through better customs and truer legislation, of the well-nigh innumerable army of "Prisoners of Poverty."

We believe that each Woman's Christian Temperance Union should be all that is embraced in the phrase, "Woman's Prohibition League," and therefore we earnestly request that they may be considered such by you, and that you will join your effort with ours to bring forward those unions which may be somewhat slow in taking up this line of work, rather than to form separate organizations.

In the name of the thousands and tens of thousands of children whom we are training in Prohibition principles in our public schools, our Loyal Temperance Legions, and our Sabbath Schools; in the name of our countless endeavors along every line of activity, we earnestly ask that you will counsel with us how we may best work during the coming months, and rest assured that we shall be glad to receive suggestions, and to co-operate with the National Committee, wherever possible.

Respectfully submitted,

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON,
HELEN M. BARKER,
MARY E. METZGAR.

The Memorial was most kindly received and referred to the National Convention without discussion or comment From this we may certainly infer that the National Committee is amply satisfied with the aid it is already receiving from the W. C. T. U., and that there is no question as to the bond which unites us as allies in a common cause

THE NATIVITY.

BY ELLA GILBERT IVES.

In the Bethlehem manger centuries ago,
When the Lord of glory stooped to mortal woe,
Did Madonna Mary in her travail wist
She with God Almighty thus was keeping tryst?

'Neath the solemn starlight in the Orient land,
When the air was quivering with the angel band,
Did the wondering shepherds half the meaning guess
Of the heavenly yearning all the world to bless?

In the dewy sweetness of the pastures old,
When the flocks were huddled in the grassy fold,
Did the angel music wake the drowsy sheep,
And the lambkins startle with a prescience deep?

Ah, the deeds majestic of that wondrous hour!
Never moments freighted with so rich a dower,
Never actor weighted with so vast a role
As Madonna's Christus, Shepherd of the soul.

CORNELIA MEDFORD'S CASE AT COURT.

BY ELEANOR H. WESTEL.

The one profession Cornelia Medford hoped she had been born to enter was the lawyer's, and the one building that interested her most was a certain county court-house, a gaunt, ungainly structure, stolidly unconscious of the mingled fondness and dread it aroused in this ambitious girl. Yet beginning immediate connection with the law was farthest from Cornelia's thoughts as she lazily swung in the hammock on the broad, tree-shaded veranda of her hillside home one warm summer evening. A generous harvest moon rose over the long mountain wall on the opposite side of the valley, offering its treasure-light to wood and river below. Snatches of conversation from the other end of the veranda, where her parents and younger sisters sat talking together, now and then roused Cornelia to express some of her dreaming.

"Father!" she exclaimed, "see the river! It's full of gold! It keeps taking more and more, and yet the moon never has less. I wonder how much it can hold!"

"Nellie," laughed her matter-of-fact sister, Mary, "I think the river had better hold us. I want to go swimming, and now! Come over here and coax, too, and I guess father'll take us to-night. You know we never can get him away from the office afternoons."

Cornelia sprang from the hammock and made an impetuous plea for the long promised treat. Soon a party of four happy school-girls went gaily down toward the river with their father to take their first lesson in swimming. It was after ten o'clock before they started home again.

Down the main street of the town, near the foot of the hill on which the Medfords' house stood, was a tall brick store. More than a year before, a burly Irish miner, named Flannerty, had bought it and opened a saloon, to the constant distress of the whole neighborhood. In helping his wife, an active member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mr. Medford had obtained and given evidence convicting Flannerty of selling liquor to children, and had thus been the means of preventing him from securing his license for a second year.

Flannerty then took down his window-screens, put canned goods in their place, removed the door curtains, built a partition across the former bar-room and announced the opening of a combined grocery store and "temperance hotel." The high revels frequently held in that "temperance" house on spring and summer evenings did not seem to be rejoicings naturally consequent upon soap-selling, nor did piles of kegs across the road awaiting the early morning arrival of the brewer's wagon, forcibly suggest sugar and flour; but then, who can interfere with a man's legitimate business? Even Cornelia Medford, as she shut her lips together and thought of days when she should be a lawyer, was obliged to concede that justly "a man is innocent till he is proved guilty."

As Mr. Medford and his charges neared Flannerty's saloon on their way home from the river, Cornelia, who was walking alone close behind her father and sister Mary, noticed that an unusual number of people were standing in quiet groups of twos and threes upon the doorsteps of darkened houses. Then the whole party heard bursts of wild shouting and ribald yells that seemed to come from Flannerty's former bar-room, where a broad path of light led from open doors across the shadowed sidewalk.

"Good-evening, Mr. Medford," said a man standing with others behind a gate a few doors below Flannerty's.

"Good-evening, Dilke," answered Mr. Medford; "seems to me they're making a good deal of noise in there for a 'temperance house!'"

"Yes, that's just what we've all been saying."

At that moment Cornelia passed Mr. Dilke. She had heard him speak to her father, but hoped that he would not recognize her. She disliked him instinctively.

"Good-evening, Miss Nellie," he said plainly.

"Good-evening, Mr. Dilke," she responded, though half-scornfully thinking, "'Miss Nellie' still! I wish these people had never heard that baby name!"

In less time than it takes to tell it, the two girls ahead had passed hurriedly beyond the saloon, almost dropping the basket of bathing suits in their excitement. On the impulse of the moment, Mr. Medford had said to Mary and Cornelia, who were now both beside him, "Go straight home with the other girls!" and had stepped into the bar-room, while Cornelia stood as if rooted to the sidewalk, facing the full light shining through the doorway, and Mary stopped in the shadow beyond where she had turned to wait for her father and Cornelia. Cornelia saw Flannerty rush out in his shirt sleeves from behind the newly built partition. Her father walked toward him, saying quietly,

"There is too much noise here, Mr. Flannerty. A man who keeps a temperance hotel must not disturb his neighbors."

Flannerty's left hand eagerly reached for Mr. Medford's right. "Ah," thought Cornelia, "there won't be trouble; he's only going to shake hands!"

Then her heart sank; the brawny miner held her father's wrist as in a vise, while his slight figure backed slowly toward the door. Flannerty still kept his visitor in the room and held his arm powerless, at the same time angrily asking him what difference the noise made to him and fiercely telling him to go. Men crowded through the partition doorway with heavy glass mugs in their hands, some of the mugs half filled with foam and a yellow brown liquor.

When they had almost reached the front door Flannerty's huge right fist struck Mr. Medford's head a heavy blow straight from the shoulder, felling him to the floor. The miner had now turned so that he stood with his back to the street, and almost over the doorsill. As Mr. Medford struggled to rise a heavier blow struck him again to the floor. Hoarse voices all about them were yelling:

"Give it to him! Now's your chance! Now's your chance!"

"Oh," gasped Cornelia, "the brute will kill him!"

With a bound she sprang forward, seized an armhole of Flannerty's waistcoat with one hand and its collar with the other, and with strength born of wild desire to save her father, pulled the unsuspecting Flannerty to his back on the sidewalk. Although half stunned Mr. Medford rose quickly again and made his way blindly out across the burly form.

The infuriated Flannerty, prostrate only for an instant, hurried again to the attack. Before his victim could escape Flannerty's hobnailed boot had torn open the face that the massive fist once more struck down, this time into the coal dust of the street. Again Cornelia reached out to seize the mad saloon-keeper, but his comrades were too eager for his success to allow a second interruption. One of them grasped Cornelia's wrists. As if a viper had bitten her, she threw him off. Meanwhile, her father had somehow managed to slip away from Flannerty and was running up the street. Flannerty ran in hot pursuit. Cornelia, close behind him still, heard the vicious snarl, "I'll finish him!" but a woman's voice from a dark side-doorway called piteously:

"Come back! Oh, come back! Come back!"

The men who stood watching echoed the cry. Flannerty hesitated, turned, and Mr. Medford had escaped.

Halfway up the side of the hill in the pallid moonlight stood a ghastly trio. Two girls, white and trembling, were urging their father to let one of them go down into the town for a doctor.

"No, children; it must be eleven o'clock. This is nothing," he said, and the blood poured to the ground from a face that seemed to Cornelia in her terror to be forever beyond recognition.

Slowly Mary helped her father to the house, while Cornelia hurried ahead to awaken Mrs. Medford and prepare her to receive him.

"Mother," she said gently when she reached the bedside, "father has been hurt a little, will you get up for a few minutes?"

A neighbor was sent for a physician. As the doctor tenderly dressed Mr. Medford's wounds, he said with laconic coolness,

"If that boot toe had been on anything smaller than a miner's 'brogan,' you'd have lost your eye, man. It's a wonder these bones guarded it so well! But Flannerty's put in plenty of the street."

The next morning, and the next, and the next, Mr. Medford wandered about the house, longing for each new day to bring release from incessant pain. Cornelia installed herself as substitute in his office. She examined long columns of mine accounts, and kept a careful record of all business questions asked.

A fortnight after he was injured Mr. Medford went again to his work, but his bruised face could tell its story more definitely than words.

"Going to prosecute, Medford?" inquired George Beale, a business acquaintance. "If you are, just call on me. You oughtn't to use that eye for a month! I'll testify to the state of your face."

"So will I!" "And I!" said others.

John Dilke, who stood by, added gravely: "Medford, I heard that brute say the day after you kept him from getting his license that if you ever entered his door, he'd kill you on the spot. I never supposed you'd go in."

"I may need you," replied Mr. Medford. "I don't feel angry at Flannerty, but I'd like it distinctly understood in this town that any law-abiding citizen may protest against a saloon nuisance without losing his head for it."

That night Mr. Medford announced his intention at home, saying:

"Well, wife, are you willing I should try it? It may cost my life, you know."

"Yes, William," was all her answer.

"And Cornelia, my daughter, you are my 'right hand man.' By the way, this is your first case, isn't it?"

"Yes, father, and I know all about it. I wrote out a full account of the whole affair before I went to sleep that dreadful night. I thought I might need it some day."

The fall term of the county court began, and Cornelia and her father were to go before the grand jury.

"Now, father," urged Cornelia as they drove to the county seat that morning, "you know you don't always remember everything exactly, so you'd better read my memoranda over, then we shall both get the matter just right."

Mr. Medford only laughed and told her that he guessed the grand jury would find their stories alike.

With trembling solicitude Cornelia watched her father disappear into the grand jury room, into the awful presence of living justice. Then her turn came. An insane desire to cry struggled with curious interest to see what would come next, as she choked over the beginning of her story. The district attorney let her tell it as she would, only putting a question now and then to encourage her. After asking the jurors if they had anything to say, he closed the interview with:

"Thank you, Miss Medford, that will do to-day."

Cornelia withdrew at once, disappointed and pleased.

"Those grand jurors weren't so 'grand' after all! They were just like ordinary men, and half of them looked as if they didn't know any more law than I do,—but they were kind to me."

Later she learned that they had found a "true bill," and that the two "counts" of Flannerty's indictment were for "assault and battery," and for "assault and battery with intent to kill."

Weeks grew into months. "Cornelia's case" had already been postponed three times. Meanwhile Flannerty's friends visited Mr. Medford again and again in his behalf pleading, urging, threatening, leaving no means untried to secure the withdrawal of the suit. All efforts were futile, and they came no more.

One evening in December after a light snowfall, Mr. Medford was sitting with his youngest child, a mere baby, in his arms, near a window in his drawing-room. The windows of the room opened out upon a side yard about fifty feet in width. Beyond the yard fence stretched a wide field. The nearest neighbors were an eighth of a mile away, and the family rarely thought of closing the drawing-room blinds to keep out the gaze of any stray passer-by.

Crack! Crack! Crash!—three pistol shots in quick succession, and the last had broken the upper pane of glass in the window nearest Mr. Medford. Cornelia entered the room and promptly put out the light, but just too late to see a large man crouch and run close to the side fence down to the street below.

The next morning as Mr. Medford examined the large bullet he had picked up in the farther corner of the room where it had struck high on the wall and fallen to the floor, he said calmly,

"That fellow must have been drunk; he couldn't shoot straight!"

And Cornelia amused herself for half an hour by making exact patterns of the huge footprints she found in the field close to the fence, evidently all made by the same person and on the previous evening.

In the following June, the case was again set for trial. Mr. Medford took Cornelia and Mary with him to court.

"Father," queried Cornelia, "where are your other witnesses? Mr. Dilke is a strong one, and Mr. Beale and the doctor both said they would be here."

"My child, Dr. X—— is out of town; George Beale has taken pains to go, too, and I can't trust the rest. John Dilke is a craven."

So the trio of the moonlit hillside stood by each other again in the court-room.

With intensest anxiety Cornelia marked every movement her father made, and leaned forward to catch every word as he gave his testimony. When he had finished she sank back relieved.

"He made only one mistake, but that wasn't serious."

Like one walking in a dream she made her way to the witness-stand. Somehow, the lawyer on Flannerty's side would not let her tell her story as the grand jury had done. His constant snapping, "I object," reminded her vaguely of an unhappy fox terrier whose temper had been crippled by the kicks and cuffs of an unkind world. When on the cross-examination, after trying in vain to bring out contradictory statements, he asked:

"Is it the business of a gentleman to walk into another's house and tell him how to manage his affairs? Do you consider your father a gentleman, Miss Medford?" Cornelia's face was crimson, and she could not speak. Then her father's attorney said, "I object!" with an emphasis so decided that the snapper was silent, and the district attorney turned to the judge with:

"Your honor, I think this had better be stopped!"—and Cornelia was released.

She saw her sister, Mary, enter the same dreadful little pen and kiss the same dirty, ill-used Bible. She saw the girl's set lips and frightened eyes, and was willing to go back if only she might answer Mary's questions for her.

Next, Flannerty and his witnesses were examined. In the course of his testimony, Flannerty said with nervous attempt at nonchalance,

"Oi just give Misther Midford a touch av me kyarpit shlipper to help the gintleman out quicker-like, but with no intintions o' harmin' 'im in the laste."

Another witness swore that "the house was that quiet ye couldn't hear a whisper side o' the open doore!"

"Of course not! That's the only whole truth you've told!" thought Cornelia, still raging inwardly over the lie about the carpet slippers.

Then came the speeches before the jury. The little snapper-lawyer barked vigorously in his turn about his innocent, much-abused client, calling Cornelia "this John L. Sullivan of our county" till she wanted to giggle with hysterical amusement. But hardest of all had been the fulsome praise given by her father's lawyer and the district attorney. When they referred in glowing terms to her "noble heroism," she yearned despairingly for home and her mother, then said grimly to herself,

"If ever I get out alive, I'll never be a lawyer nor ever come here again!"

At last the trial was over. The jury's quick verdict of "Guilty on the first count only," was followed by the judge's sentence, "Twenty-five dollars fine, costs, and ten days in the county jail."

That evening two tired, silent people sat together on the broad veranda of Mr. Medford's home, watching the shuttle-like willow leaves now weaving, now raveling their tangled mesh of light and shade across the moonlit floor. Suddenly Mr. Medford looked up.

"Daughter," he asked, "what was that little roll you clutched so tightly when you were on the witness-stand to-day?"

"Only my memoranda, father; I took the paper with me for reference in case I forgot or was confused."

"My dear child, heaven be praised for your accurate memory! Don't you know that if you had actually used that paper in court we might have been charged with conspiracy—with planning the whole affair to get Flannerty into court? Then where would your 'case' have been?"

A few days later Mr. Medford came home from his office with the news that John Dilke had gone to the court with Flannerty and testified under oath that he was absent from town the night of the attack upon Mr. Medford and at the time of the trial, but that as a very near neighbor, generally at home evenings, he could swear that Flannerty's house was always quiet, respectable and orderly, and was so considered throughout the neighborhood. Flannerty was accordingly allowed to spend the two Sabbaths of his term of imprisonment with his family and friends in the respectability of that quiet and orderly home.

Cornelia Medford has long since grown out of an impulsive, impatient girlhood into well poised womanhood, and far away from her home in the mining town shares the lot and life of a celebrated Boston lawyer. Yet not once does she sigh to enter a court-room, nor does she regard with the slightest discontent the fact that her husband, not she, is a lawyer.

"PRAISE makes good men better and bad men worse."

BRAWL AND BRAWN, OR BRAIN?

BY GEORGE MILTON HAMMEL.

It was a Great Occasion,—"The Gridiron Broil," in Cincinnati, Ohio, on Thanksgiving Thursday, year of Our Lord 1895. The Cincinnati Commercial Gazette devoted eight columns to a record of the affair, and contemporaneous organs of public opinion, inspired by similar enterprise, published long and thrilling accounts of it.

The Occasion? It was a football fight between representative students of two institutions of learning—the University of Cincinnati, founded by a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and "deaned" by a gentleman reputed to be, or to have been, a minister of a Christian church, and Marietta College, founded by the children of the Puritans, and presided over by a refined, cultured, Christian gentleman, a doctor of divinity.

The "dean" and the "doctor" were present on the Great Occasion. Each stood by his "boys" and performed such offices as were possible under the circumstances. But the circumstances were peculiar. To describe them the reporters employed most brutal adjectives and violent nouns, and the slashing headlines were indicative of disturbance, disorder, disgust and disgrace—and almost everything else in the category of "dis."

In the first place, despite the apparent friendliness of the antagonistic teams, there existed latent bad feeling between them, due to a previous controversy over playing the game in Cincinnati. The match only focused the initial ill feeling. The Marietta boys were sensitive, resented adverse decision, used offensive terms (not peculiar to football and not characteristic of college chapel) and employed fists as well as feet in settling the question of primacy between the teams. The president of Marietta "induced" one of his boys to offer apology to the umpire, but, unfortunately he was absent, when, in the evening, the left guard used language offensive to a Cincinnati university alumnus, and retired to his room in the hotel with "a split ear and a bandaged head." Evidently the Marietta team was not in a state of ecstatic thanksgiving. Only the Cincinnati team and its friends were happy. The air of Cincinnati—foul with the breath of its breweries and the stench of its stills—was filled with the blast of the terrible tin horn and the yell of the local tribe.

Yes, it was a Great Occasion! "All the boxes in the grand stand were filled by Cincinnati's best society people, who were well represented." It was Thanksgiving day—in the afternoon! There had been appropriate services in the churches in the morning, but the "best society" of Cincinnati was not very well represented in the congregations, and there prevailed a depressing sense of fewness and forlornness among those who listened to the annual Thanksgiving sermon. Thanksgiving day, as a day of worship, seems to be obsolescent; it is now rather a holiday, opportune for football matches with their rushes, smashed heads, broken bones, betting and death.

Instead of football and a brawl there might, could and should have been—befitting institutions of learning—a tournament of ideas, a rivalry of oratory, a conflict of mind with mind in the arena of sociologic and political discussion. But this was an event of rush, roar, yell, hisses, hoots, greenbacks and police. For greenbacks were flourished and the police had all they could do to keep the crowd from carrying off the offending "left guard" from the field. Then came the famous "Adverse Decision." Marietta refused to accept the penalty, and the team left the gridiron. Later there were fisticuffs at a downtown hotel.

And the evening and the morning were Thanksgiving Day, 1895, in the year of our Lord.

Our "best society" (!) and our institutions of Christian learning would do well to ponder the lesson of this occasion. "Many citizens [of Marietta] are of the opinion, after becoming acquainted with this game, and with football as now played, that it ought to be dropped from the list of college sports. It is at the last but refined brutality or scientific brutality, and not necessary for physical or intellectual growth." Decidedly not necessary, reiterates the person who holds old-fogy ideas as to the functions of a college—the person who naïvely asks, "What is the reactive effect upon college life of an occasion like this?" He reads that there were many heated arguments on the field during the game, and that "some of the language used by the young men who have so much better education than baseball players, would have made the immortal John Robinson put on ear-muffs." It is to be hoped that this report is of an exaggerated nature, because "the immortal John Robinson"—he of the circus—was noted for a vigor and viciousness of sulphurous profanity that was the glory of a circus or a saloon.

And where were the popular dean and the potent president in this crisis? They had left the field in disgust—I had almost written disgrace. "The game broke up in disorder, because the language used by the Marietta players in particular, was so disgusting that the professors of the school left the field," said the Commercial Gazette reporter. Not only was the language of a fiery and unreportable profaneness, but the displays of physical energy seem to have been equally barbaric. One member of the Cincinnati team made a record of startlingly brilliant achievements—knocking down eighteen men, kicking four in the stomach, breaking three heads and one finger and spraining four backs!

Now, the writer cordially favors physical culture. He thinks that every institution of learning should have on its faculty a Physical Director, but punting, bucking the line, tackling, bone-breaking, head smashing, kicking in the stomach, killing, cursing, betting—what have these things to do with physical culture? Fact is, we are in the days of the white Indian! The savage has returned to his primitive haunts! The savage, surviving in the soul of the student (? !) is on the war path with his college "yell," his rush on the gridiron, his vindictiveness, his passion for fight; and our gray-headed professors of Greek, Latin, mathematics, logic and rhetoric are unwilling or unable, or both, to utter protest against this revival of barbarism, this sovereignty of the savage. A university director tells me that this thing pervades the whole country, and that no college can "go" unless it favors the fad. But in Cincinnati, at least one president of an institution of learning dares to be loyal to lofty ideals. Over his own signature, at risk of alienating patronage, he has announced his disapproval of the organization of a team bearing the name of his college.

If the college cannot "go" unless it cater to the anarchist, the brute, the savage in young manhood's hot life, then were it best for it to go where all failures go—to the perdition of lost ideals. Brawn and brawl, or brain—for which does the college stand?

THE FIRST TEMPERANCE MEETING IN AMERICA.

BY FRANCES ROBERTS.

The first temperance meeting in all probability on this continent was held at the French mission of Sillery as early as 1648. The temperance question had long agitated the colony, not in regard to the colonists, though here, too, there was great need of reform, but in regard to the Indians who drank simply to get drunk. The missionaries were in despair and called a council of all the tribes in the summer of 1648 at Sillery. After mass the drums were beaten and the Indians, freshly oiled and painted, bedecked with furs and feathers, followed by a band of musicians, screeching and yelling through their primitive reed instruments, gathered into a ring at its call.

An Algonquin chief—a zealous convert of the Jesuits—in the full panoply of war, rose from his place and read a late edict from the governor imposing penalties on drunkenness. Then in his own name and that of the other chiefs he declared that all drunkards should be given to the French to punish. And the French did punish them! They led the culprit, after the daily sermon, to the door of the church, where kneeling on the pavement, partially stripped and holding the penitential torch in his hands, he underwent a vigorous whipping.

Not only the drinkers but the dealers were punished. In Saral's time any one engaged in such traffic was condemned to death, and two men were actually shot for selling brandy to the Indians! Great excitement shook the settlement. Most of the colonists were implicated. An explosion followed. A woman had been imprisoned for the same cause, and a Jesuit, moved by pity, begged the governor to release her. The governor was beside himself with rage, and exclaimed, angrily, "You and your priests were the first to cry out against this trade, and now you want to save the traders from punishment. I won't be the sport of your contradictions any longer. If it isn't a crime for this woman it shan't be a crime for anybody." And he held to his word.

There was now full license to liquor dealers. A violent reaction followed, and brandy flowed like water. The ungodly drank to spite the priests and revenge them for the restraints they had practiced so long. The priests saw their teachings despised and their church threatened. On the other hand, the sale of brandy was of great profit to the colony. If the Indians could not get it in Canada they had only to go to the Dutch settlements on the Hudson. And Canada could not afford to lose their alliance, so they remained between two evils.

IT is a beautiful saying from one of our poets, who, speaking of our birth, says:—"Every soul leaves port under sealed orders. We cannot know whither we are going or what we are to do till the time comes for breaking the seal." But I can tell you something more beautiful than this. Every regenerated soul sets out on its voyage with an invisible Captain on board, who knows the nature of our sealed orders from the outset, and who will shape our entire voyage accordingly, if we will only let him.—*Dr. A. ## INDIAN GREETING.

[Following is the unique greeting of the Indian union of Warm Springs, Oregon, to the National Convention at Baltimore.—Eds.]

To the Chieftain of the White Ribbon Army, greeting:

We send our banner to the great meeting, hoping it will speak to our white friends there. Its symbols are true, and we ask that you will take up the hatchet and strike the serpent—strong drink—in the name of the Indians.

Tullux Hollequilla.

Whisky has been a dread to me for years and I dread it still more when I think of the young. It is an evil when we look at it on any side. I hate it.

Kishwalk Chocta.

Long ago when the Indians were living at The Dalles there were many deaths among us. The temperance work has started and there are many Christian friends to help us and that makes us feel strong.

Pipps Walladowish.

Mrs. Unruh has begun a good work here and we hope that she may be able to carry on the work among other tribes. I know how much misery and wretchedness is caused by strong drink. The sufferings of our own tribe are little compared to the wretchedness of other tribes.

Mrs. Ellen Olney.

This is a Christian work and it is God's people who are most active in it. Mrs. Symintire.

We hear of the enlightened nations suffering so from drink. To the Indian race it is like walking through thorns. Mrs. Teias.

I know whisky is bad. It is like a loaded gun pointed to the soul of the one who drinks. Since I became a Christian my life is too precious to throw away on whisky.

Jack Pitt.

When the treaty was first made with the government we were told to go out by ourselves away from the bad white man and whisky. Where are the large bands of Indians who roamed along the banks of the Columbia River—gone—because of drink.

Oh, why were we not warned sooner? So many have been swept away by this hidden river—intemperance.

Skitus Cree.

We will hold up this little corner of the work here.

Mrs. Semeo.

I wish whisky had never been made; then there would not be so many unhappy homes.

Mrs. Catherine Albert.

Our prayer and wish is that this great evil may be swept away from our race. And may the life of our leader be spared until this serpent, strong drink, be struck down.

Mrs. Tomer Handley.

WILLARD HALL NOONTIDE MEETINGS.

'Twas a cloudy, murky day, but out from the dampness a heavy-hearted man had stolen into the quiet haven of Willard Hall. There he threw himself down upon his knees, quite oblivious of my presence, and aloud poured forth his petition as a cry from the great deep. Softly I stole away and left him with his God, but a note of praise was in my heart for this sacred spot. Later he said to me, pointing to one of our workers, "Do you see that woman there? Well, she prayed with me a few days ago, and though she knows nothing of it, she was the means used in bringing me to the cross." Let us take heart, for we may plant better and deeper than we know.

The sorrowful men and women that congregate at the noonday meetings are daily yielding to the Spirit's influence. A letter was received by Mrs. Carse some weeks ago freighted with anxiety for a wandering son. It came from one of the white-ribbon mothers of Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Carse carried its burden tenderly until she could meet with us at Willard Hall and roll it over upon the Burden-bearer. This she did more than once, and earnest hearts kept incense burning on the altar for mother and son. How all searching is the eye of God, how irresistible His power! After the third presentation of this petition in the meeting by Mrs. Carse, she returned to her office in the Temple, to find this same young man seated there. He testified before the meeting shortly after as follows: "Alone in the great city of Chicago, cold and friendless, I was walking its streets quite conscious that of all the people I met no one cared whether I lived or died, and I said to myself, 'I'll find Willard Hall, and go and look at mother's name on one of the tablets there and that of my poor sister who has gone home to Glory.' I came in for the first time two days ago, and back again to yesterday's meeting. Sitting alone in my seat while the rest of you were praying, Jesus spoke to my soul and I gave myself unreservedly to Him." Later, a sorrowful mother found her way to his side and said, "Your words have cheered me to believe that my wayward boy will one day yield and turn to his mother's God." The young man replied earnestly: "Come every day to this blessed spot. Your son will come, I know it, I know it."

A SCHEME FOR UNITING REFORMERS.

Dear Union Signal:—The following is a plan by which, without any changes being made in our present laws, the "Political Party Platform" may be made of service as an effective auxiliary in producing a practical democratic government.

There should be established a "Preliminary Referendum" system; also a "Final Referendum" system. But before it is feasible to accomplish either of these objects, a political party must adopt a method by which the present "party platform" as now used shall be discontinued, or be used differently, so as to be more effective for its intended purpose. In place of the party platform, containing its planks, I propose to substitute a Voice Petition Calendar, as hereinafter set forth.

My plan for effecting the desired union of forces is as follows: First, to copy nearly all of the preamble adopted by the People's, Prohibitionists' and Socialists' parties of 1892; but to adhere to expressions of sentiment in general respecting progressive political reform. Then insert as follows:

"We are a party that demand progressive reform, and we are upon the side of every proposition for reform which tends to make mankind more virtuous and intelligent, or that will improve the condition of man in any way.

"Whenever the people of the nation, or any section of it, or any class or classes of the people become awakened to the fact of the existence of civil or social wrongs no longer bearable, there shall be ample freedom and opportunity for the wronged ones to be heard, so that, through moral suasion wrought upon the consciences of the people, the wrong may be abated by law, in accordance with true democratic principles of ruling; that is to say, that, by laws now in force, or by special legislation therefor, each separate question of public interest at issue must be adjusted according to the will of the majority of the people."

The people of this nation are as intelligent and patriotic as any that ever lived, and yet, our peculiar conditions are such as to compel many to believe that a permanent general system of progressive reform, such as this enlightened nation demands, cannot be established; and that no considerable proportion of the important questions which are pressing upon us can be solved until the people repossess the reins of government. So long as those desiring reform are not united, the leaders of the old parties will continue to hold control of public affairs. Therefore, we urgently ask all citizens who would prefer a government of progressive reform, based upon true democratic principles, to a government controlled by a few dominating, corrupt leaders, to join with us in a plan of confederation, which provides that all associations of citizens and factions of reform, whether majorities or minorities—all shall have the same "fostering care" and protection.

When thus united, the people will have the reins of this government, so that as the necessity of the day may hereafter occasion the originating of reform in order to overthrow unbearable wrongs or advance the development of nature's wealth, or by any means whatever to bestow benefits upon mankind, the people will be free to accept or reject any teaching as they may think essential to their welfare. And when a question of public interest at issue shall have been approved by a majority voice of the voters, then this proposed party approves, and is pledged to secure legislation therefor.

As individuals, while members of this association of combined forces, we may differ in opinion respecting any one separate question of public interest, or several of them; at the same time, we are to approve of and support every means to bestow upon each other equal justice, and to agree to sustain our republican commonwealth upon pure democratic principles, as defined in our party's "Constitution-Platform." The creed of which is: ascertain and enforce the people's will according to majorities. We declare therefore the following

DEMOCRATIC REFORM PARTY'S CONSTITUTION-PLATFORM.

1. Preliminary Referendum.— We demand the establishment of a public service, providing efficient means for ascertaining the will or expression of the voters respecting questions of public interest, which shall be for public information only, as a "preliminary referendum" system, to be conducted entirely separate from partisan politics, and from elections for other purposes.

2. Final Referendum.—We demand, that as speedily as practicable, through proper legislation therefor, provision shall be made by which all acts of legislation hereafter made the law, before going into effect shall be subject to be presented to the citizen-voters for their majority ratification; provided, that if, within —— days, a petition therefor shall be presented, which is signed by —— per cent of the voters.

3. Democratic Legislation.— That every nominee of this "Democratic Reform Party," who shall have been elected and fills any public office as a representative officer, shall be in duty bound to labor for and support any measure to be made into law, that shall be pending before a legislative body of which he is a member, whenever it is positively and publicly known to be in accordance with the will of the majority of the voters of the district he represents.

N. B.—Every delegate to any convention held under the auspices of the "Democratic Reform Party;" and also, every nominee for election to fill any public office, shall pledge himself to sustain this "constitution-platform."

VOICE PETITION CALENDAR.

The "Voice Petition Calendar" is not a party platform. The purpose for which questions are placed upon the said calendar, is that the party may pledge itself to impartially endeavor, by all honorable means, to have the voice of the voters correctly ascertained respecting each separate question at issue.

When a question is presented to a convention for the purpose of being placed upon this calendar, a vote should be taken to ascertain whether a majority of the delegates vote affirmatively; but, the vote is not taken to ascertain the number of delegates who support the measure in sentiment; it being understood that every measure placed upon said calendar before made law, must be submitted to the "consent" of the people, as set forth in our "constitution platform."

As an example of voice petition calendar, we offer the following:

We favor the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold, at the ratio of 16 to 1, by international agreement, and urge our President and his associates who are vested with authority; and whose duty it is to do so, to use their utmost diligence to hasten the convening of the international monetary conference to accomplish such end. At the same time, we demand that, as speedily as possible, all necessary legislation therefor be secured and enforced to restore silver to the position it occupied as primary money prior to 1850; i. e., its free and unlimited coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Other voice petitions to follow the above example.

There is no reason why any of the present existing political parties should not endorse this plan, on its merits, and earnestly enter into the cause of its execution. This is a non-partisan scheme. Any party or person may endorse it. Respectfully submitted by

John A. Ball.

THE MECCA OF W. C. T. U. WOMEN.

Dear Union Signal:—I had the great pleasure of hearing Miss Willard speak one morning in Willard Hall, and I thought when she referred to the Temple as the center to which the eyes of all our temperance workers are turned, that it might please you to have a little word of testimony from a representative of one of your most remote branches, viz., South Africa.

When I came to Chicago a little more than a year ago, I experienced for the first time the feeling of utter loneliness which comes over a stranger in a great city. I knew no one, and felt sick at heart in the midst of the busy throng. But I knew the Temple, and when I had been here a day or two I bought a map of the city, and found my way to the corner of La Salle and Monroe streets. I knew the great pile as soon as I came in sight of it, and my heart throbbed with joy and pride as I stood at the corner of the street and gazed at it, and thought, "This is our Temple; the home of the W. C. T. U." I went into Willard Hall, and took a long and careful look at every thing, for I was seeing it for all the dear white-ribbon sisters in South Africa. Then I went upstairs and found Mrs. Woodbridge, and I shall never forget her kind welcome. I left the building with the feeling that I was no longer alone, but had found friends whose hearts were warm and kindly.

This summer when Mrs. Andrew Murray was in the city, I asked her what places she wished to visit. Immediately came the answer, "I must see the Temple." And so we went there that very morning and sat in the noonday meeting, and she spoke to me of the love our women have for this beautiful building which they feel belongs to them as well as to the women of this country.

I hope you will pardon me for what may seem an egotistical letter, but I have always felt that I would like you to know what the Temple is to those of us who come as strangers to this city. It is the Mecca of the W. C. T. U. women all over the world.

Believe me, yours sincerely,

Emilie J. Solomon.

ARE THE SCHOOL TEMPERANCE PHYSIOLOGIES ACCURATE?

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—One of the methods of opposing the temperance education movement in the public schools from the first has been to challenge the statements of the approved text books. These opposers, in their limited knowledge of the facts, have assumed that no competent authority is responsible for these manuals of instruction. At that point they are not well informed.

The greatest possible care has been taken in the preparation and revision of these books to secure absolute accuracy. Writers, eminent in science, among whom are Dr. H. Newell Martin, Fellow of the Royal Society in England, and professor of biology in Johns Hopkins University; Prof. A. B. Palmer, M. D., LL.D., late dean of the Medical University at Ann Arbor, Mich.; Dr. Tracy, of the New York board of health, and others, are the authors and editors of these works.

The subject matter of each book has been read by experts in manuscript, and three times in proof. Every statement has been challenged, and nothing has been allowed to remain that could not be sustained by good medical authority. With these authorities all on file, any disputed point is easily substantiated. Hence I have never quailed in the face of the battle.

The American Medical Association is the national society of the Allopathic physicians of this country, and comprises among its membership men most eminent in the medical profession. The Journal of this association, one of the foremost medical journals of the United States, under date of November 2, page 776, contains the following timely article on this subject, which is commended to these critics and to any friend who may have felt anxious over the criticisms:

SCHOOL BOOKS ON PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE.

HARTFORD, CONN., October, 1895.

To The Editor:—

We inclose the following report, which at this time has considerable medical interest in many sections of the country. During the past few years laws have been passed in Congress and the legislatures of forty-one different states, requiring instruction in the public school on physiology, hygiene and the effects of spirits and narcotics on the human body. A large number of school books have been prepared to meet this requirement, nearly all of which have been compiled and edited by medical men, many of whom are eminent in the profession.

Many of these works have been assailed in the daily press and denounced as containing errors, but the criticism so far has been limited to mere statements. The authors of these works have invited from the medical profession the most critical examination and inquiry concerning the accuracy of the facts stated. This report is in accordance with this request, and the object (in which all medical men are interested) is to eliminate all possible errors and raise the character and accuracy of such works to the highest possible standard.

Very truly yours, H. A. B.

REPORT.

We, the undersigned physicians, have been requested to examine and report on the various school physiologies which have been introduced to comply with the laws requiring temperance instruction in common schools.

Our special attention has been directed to that part relating to the effects of alcohol, opium and other narcotics on the human body. We have received and carefully examined eight different series of books called by the following names: "The Pathfinder," "Appleton's," "Eclectic," "Union," "Blaisdell," "Dulanie's," "The Health Series" and "Martin's High School Physiology."

As a result of this examination we are unanimous in opinion that the statements and teachings of these works concerning the effects of alcohol and other narcotics on the body are correct, and fully supported by the most authoritative studies of scientific investigators up to the present time.

We are also of opinion that in both letter and spirit these works are highly commendable, particularly in the admirable groupings of physiologic and hygienic facts, with excellent illustrations and clear, concise statements.

The practical character of these books commend them to us, and the interest and value of their teachings would seem to place them among the most important subjects that can be used in our public schools.

23 Trull St., Boston, Mass.

DEAR COMRADES:—We spent some time recently in discussing methods by which lagging unions might be revivified. The following paragraph is now sent to us by the general officers of the National W. C. T. U., and the recommendation therein contained will meet with your heartiest approval. It is as follows: "Supposing a union has ceased to accomplish much of anything in a locality because it has fallen into the wrong hands, the workers have become fixed in ideas, the work has been outgrown, or, for some reason, they do not help the cause any more. We know there are many such instances. It is our misfortune, and nobody's fault. There seems to be an opinion that in such a case a community is condemned to let such a union linger on as a sort of 'cumberer of the ground.' This, however, is not true. The proper way is to let the old union go its gait, but to organize a new one out of fresh material. As a matter of course, nothing needs be said against the old, but in the call for a new union, which should go forth from press and pulpits, let it be said that it has been thought best to form a new society, there is plenty of room for two, and that they can help rather than hinder each other, etc. We earnestly hope that this method may be followed in village, town and city where work languishes."

---

The old-fashioned Pound Party is being revived in England in the interest of philanthropy, with this modification,—it is called "Pound Day" and the following notice is placed in the local papers and sent out to friends throughout the country: "It is proposed to have an annual pound day for this Home, and we have fixed upon September 29. Will all our kind friends send on that day to Miss ——, a pound of something—tea, sugar, rice, cheese, currants, jam, soap, candles, blacklead, soda, pins, wool or a pound in gold or silver. Please help us but avoid perishables."

Might not the local union have a day once a year on which it asked for gifts? Many of our societies could utilize such materials as it might enumerate, and most of all that emblem of all the products of the earth which is the best and worst thing in the material world—namely, the currency of Uncle Samuel and the coin of the realm.

SPECIAL DIFFICULTY.

Q.—Are the duties of a corresponding secretary confined to the answering of letters and compiling of reports, and is she exceeding her prerogative if she does work in other lines?

A.—The duties of the general officers, whether they be officers of the local, county, district, state, National or World's unions, are whatever will best advance the interests of the work. The answering of letters and the culling of reports is a part of the duty of a corresponding secretary, but it ought to be but a small part. She should be a woman with a broad outlook over the field as a whole, and a quick perception as to the needs of the work. Naturally, the duties which come to her increase in direct ratio to the importance of the position she holds. When it comes into the realm of district, state, National or World's organization, she should in no sense be counted as an office secretary, but the detail work of the office should, so far as possible, be relegated to others, and she should be able to plan comprehensively for the organization, so far as her jurisdiction over it extends. If she be a speaker, so much the better, and it should be distinctly understood that she is not less corresponding secretary when in the field addressing unions, conventions, etc., than when at her desk replying to letters. What is true of one of the officers of a union is also true of all. The larger the view of the work both in the eyes of the officers themselves, and the women who have made them officers, the better it will be for the interests of the organization. Whatever tends to the conservation of energy and the reaching of largest results, is for the greatest good of the greatest number; and to meet the greatest good of the greatest number in the quickest possible way is the first duty of the general officers of all unions, from local to World's.

An evangelistic superintendent writes: "I have been led to think how few of the saloon-keepers we reach. The promise is that God's Word shall not return unto Him void. Why not write out texts of appropriate Scripture and leave one in each saloon? I have followed a form similar to this: 'Prepare to meet thy God;' God's Word—Amos 4:12. What are you doing to prepare? 'For you I am praying.' This is left on the counter, addressed to the proprietor."

We may attack the saloon and its interests through press and pulpit, but the saloon-keeper as a person must be personally reached. I think the sister's plan might be utilized in small communities. Printed Scripture verses, Testaments, or even Bibles may be left in saloons. But to my mind nothing can exceed in power personal prayers and exhortations such as were offered in the saloons by our early Crusaders.

Faithfully yours,

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

The trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.—I. Peter 1:7.

In answer to the "Trumpet Blast" of the National officers money and pledges are rolling in. Mrs. Annie McClure, Williamstown, recording secretary Kentucky W. C. T. U., writes: "Dear Miss Willard, I am so glad you have made your appeal for the Temple a personal one to every white-ribboner. You may depend on me for five dollars, and as much more as I can get." Mrs. M. L. Malloy, Ishpeming, Mich., writes: "I have just read 'A Trumpet Blast.' I will pledge five dollars, to be paid within six months, beside the one dollar I now enclose. Please send me a few copies of THE UNION SIGNAL of December 5. I will publish 'A Trumpet Blast' as widely as I can. Send me also some Temple Bricks." The following have sent five dollars in answer to the call: Mrs. A. P. Everson, Rose, Kan; Mrs. S. F. Botsford, Philadelphia, Pa.; Vinson Woodhead, Millview, Pa., Mrs. T. E. Bassett, Grand Crossing, Ill.; Mrs. M. P. Meckinnon, Exeter, Neb.; Mrs. Dora East, Orange, N. J.

"By the lake in proud Chicago
Do the towers of Temperance rise,
Lofty walls and stately turrets,
Reaching upward toward the skies.
Over all a woman kneeling,
Lifts to heaven her hands appealing;
Doubting hearts, fresh courage taking
Thrill us faintly, far away
Skies grow rosy; dawn is breaking,
God is on his throne to-day!

The above poem by Mrs. Jessie I. Pierson, Washington, D. C., has never been published although it was written as far back as June, 1891. I am sorry I have only space for the first verse this week, the balance will be given later in this column. The perusal of it will, I am sure, be an uplift to all lovers of "The House Beautiful." Yes, "God is on His throne to-day," and that to hear our cry and answer our prayers. Mrs. Pierson gives an interesting history of how this sweet poem came to be written. She says: "The story would be incomplete without a reference to the winsome little maiden of six summers, for whom it was written. Always a staunch temperance girl, she prayed daily for the Lord 'to knock down the saloons and help the Temple rise.' So great was her faith, that I have been awakened many times by the soft touch of baby hands upon my cheek followed by the whispered inquiry, 'Mamma, do you think God's done it yet?'"

The Sheffield, Pa., union, have entered the Wheel race, and propose to raise $100. They have just sent fifteen filled Wheels, with other money amounting to $23.85. The Fayette Y's, of Baltimore, are also in the race. Miss Annie Cook sends ten filled Wheels for them, their first instalment on a pledge of $100. The Waterbury, Conn., W. C. T. U. are also in it, in behalf of the union. Mrs. O. E. Brown writes: "It is with great pleasure that I ship you to-day by express twenty-eight filled Wheels ($36.30). We will hurry the remainder." The Attleboro, Mass., Y's, are away ahead in the Wheel race, thanks to the indefatigable labors of their president, Mrs. J. A. Bigney. The union is not a year old, yet they have sent $50 in filled Wheels, and promise the balance by January first. Mrs. D. Cunningham, Cadiz, Ohio, sends four Wheels filled by herself, also four filled by her friend, Mrs. Dickinson, and $10 from Mrs. Sue Harrison, in all $24.30. Mrs. E. B. Murdoch, Baltimore, Md., is nobly doing her part; she has sent in seventeen filled Wheels.

A dear old saint born in 1812, Mrs. Prnella Rose Baker, Blanchard, Iowa, sends a check for $100. Mrs. M. A. Gordon sends a check for $100, raised by the sixteen unions of Litchfield county, Conn. It is to place the name of Mrs. Mary A. Beecher Stone in Willard Hall. This saintly woman died in 1892, aged seventy-three. She was state president of Connecticut two years and state treasurer seven years.

All orders for Temple Wheels, Temple bricks, mite-boxes, and Baby Band lists, and everything pertaining to the Temple, should be addressed to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, The Temple, Chicago. Send two-cent stamp for either the Temple Wheel, mite-box, or a dozen Temple bricks. Money orders and checks should be made out in the name of Mr G. B. Shaw, treasurer, and sent to our financial secretary, Miss Sara G. Johnson, Room 1111, The Temple, Chicago.

THE CHRIST-CHILD.

BY JOEL SWARTZ, D. D.

Saviour, Thou wast once a child,
Holy, harmless, undefiled.
Humble was thy human birth,
When thou camest down to earth.

Thou didst walk with sinful men,
But without a spot or stain;
Tempted, thou didst never yield—
By thy grace and strength our shield!

Since on tender childhood's head
Thy dear holy hands were laid,
All the children of the race
Have a larger, nobler place.

"Suffer them to come to me,"
Draws our parent hearts to Thee;
With the children, Lord, we come,
And for all Thy arms have room.

MRS. GRANT'S WHITE RIBBON.

BY MRS. E. M. MC KIBBIN.

Mrs. Grant, our local president, has always been very particular about our wearing the white ribbon, not only on our street suits but also at home. She never considers a dress finished till a bow of white ribbon is in its place, and her "wash dresses" are not "done up" till the same badge is knotted into the buttonholes. She has even talked of fining us if she saw one of us without it, and appointed a committee to take charge of the matter. Of course this had the effect of making us more thoughtful, but we hadn't become quite as particular as she was, till the spring of '92, when the circumstance occurred which I am about to relate.

We had been very busy circulating petitions and distributing prohibition literature. On election day Mrs. Grant and I were in charge of certain territory in our part of the city and were armed with leaflets and Prohibition tickets. We met with rebuffs and not a few downright insults, and I should have given up in despair and fright and fled to the protection of my own fireside but for Mrs. Grant's courageous spirit. I will tell you in her own words and as she told the story at our next meeting, how it came about that the little white ribbon badge completely changed the current of two lives and dispersed the clouds which darkened their sky.

"Rose Roberts and I canvassed the third ward. There are eleven saloons in less than four blocks down there, and families living over, under, beside or behind every one of them. The polling place in that ward was in a vacant room over a basement saloon. We stood outside, near the door, and offered our Prohibition leaflets and tickets to the men as they passed in. It was near closing time, when there came around the corner and halted at the step, the most forlorn specimen of saloon productions I have ever seen. As he came near he raised his head a little and then stopped and gazed with wide eyes and parted lips at my white ribbon. Then he came up a step or two and paused again; his face paled and twitched, but he never raised his eyes from my badge. As he came near I offered him the tickets and leaflets and asked him to vote for home and prohibition. He made as if he would pass me, but came back, took the tickets and passed on into the room. When he came out he walked over to us and said, 'I've voted for Prohibition. I never did before and I shouldn't have done it now but for that,' he pointed to my badge. 'My mother belonged to that; she wore the white ribbon till I wouldn't let her join it again. I haven't seen one for seven years till now; I haven't wanted to. I've drank up everything we ever had and made myself a devil and my home a hell, and no tongue can tell how I hate myself and everything that has made me what I am.'

"He must once have been a handsome man, for his face, in spite of dissipation, showed a high grade of intelligence, his head was large, his forehead broad and high and his eyes expressive. I was expressing my sympathy, and about to give him some wholesome advice, when he stopped me.

"'But,' he said, 'the devilish business has had the last cent of my money and the last second of my time, so you need not talk to me. But if you can tell me where to get a night's lodging, cheap, without the fumes of hell thrown in, you will oblige me greatly.'

"I was a little surprised at his earnestness and at his manner of expressing himself, but I gave him a coffee house card, asked him to let me know how he was getting on, and then we went home.

"I didn't expect to see him again, but yesterday morning as I was sweeping the light snow off the steps he passed the house. He stopped and asked me if he might sweep the walks for something to eat, and of course I consented. While he was eating he told me something about himself.

"He is a journalist by profession and held good positions until so incapacitated by drink as to be incapable of performing acceptable work. Then followed the same old story that every temperance worker hears with heart-breaking frequency. No work, no one interested in him beyond the matter of dollars and cents; no door open to him but the entrance to damnation, no one to extend a helping hand. Down he went, with none to raise him up or hold him back, for he had left his home and for seven years had had no word from mother or wife, and had never written to them.

"'They think I'm dead,' he said, 'and I'll let them think so until I can go home a man.' I told him I would help him all I could, and have tried to find work for him, but haven't succeeded very well. Now, ladies, as the white ribbon has stretched across the path to perdition and turned one more poor wanderer into the road to righteousness shall we not take up his case and do something for him?"

We found him employment and after he had earned enough to clothe himself respectably he was ready to go home. His wife, a cultured woman, was supporting herself and his aged mother.

When he reached the old home, many miles from our city, his heart almost failed him and he grew faint with fear lest his quest should be in vain. But the little wife knew him and received him with all the old-time love glowing on her face. Then she led him to his mother's room, and with tears streaming down her cheeks she pointed to the still form prepared for burial. The wrinkled hands were folded, the pale face wore a look of peace, and upon her breast nestled a bow of white ribbon.

He brought his wife to B., and they are among our strongest, firmest friends. Upon his coat he wears our badge, and his voice and pen are fearless and furious in his relentless warfare against the legions of darkness.

A LADY'S CELLAR.

It is too soon to abolish the cellar. If it is properly kept and ventilated, the cellar undoubtedly makes the house above it more wholesome. While land is so economically parceled out in city lots, we cannot have places of storage on a level with our kitchens. Economy and comfort are both promoted by purchasing many supplies in large quantities, and these must be stored.

It is possible to have a clean, convenient and wholesome cellar with our ordinary houses and mode of living. Among my acquaintances is a lady whose cellar is a pleasant place to visit, and withal so clean and orderly that when a plumber or workman of any sort is called to perform some work in it, he generally gazes about in open-eyed wonder, appearing to think he ought to go down one more flight of stairs to find the ash heaps, dust, cobwebs, stale vegetables and musty odors which he has learned to suppose belong to this repository.

Perhaps you object to the expression, "lady's cellar." It is not a familiar conjunction of terms. A lady may have a boudoir, a parlor, a bedroom—but when has a lady's cellar ever been heard of? That room is supposed to belong to the house, to be an appendage of the kitchen.

It ought to be a fact, however, that if the mistress of the house is in truth a lady, every part of her abode will be beautified and purified by her refinement, the cellar and toilet as certainly as the drawing-room. With your permission, then, this lady's cellar is clean, light and airy, the windows and doors being so placed as to facilitate ventilation. No calcimine is used, but twice a year it has a coat of good old-fashioned whitewash. To the housekeeper who has never enjoyed that odor of cleanliness, I would recommend a journey to her freshly limewashed walls. My friend tells me that once a week her cellar is thoroughly swept, and occasionally the cemented floor is sprinkled with copperas water. All ashes from the furnace are removed every day, and no decay is allowed. I observed that the boxes and barrels in use were not placed directly on the floor, but each one rested on slats of wood, to keep them from any possible mold or dampness.

About one-third of the space was partitioned off especially for food supplies, and this could be kept at a low temperature. Here were the apple bins, in this case a row of large boxes, one filled with Tallman sweets, one with Spitzenbergs, one with Greenings. An artist would have enjoyed the bright coloring set off by the white wall. Here was the barrel with the cider turning to vinegar.

"I buy this cider from a friend in the country," she said, "because I have no confidence in the ordinary vinegar of the shops."

Here were the shelves of fruit in glass jars hidden from view by a thick covering to keep out those meddlesome chemical rays. Here was the jar of butter. She lifted the cover to show the circular bag of salt laid over the top to preserve the flavor.

In the outer cellar were barrels of kindling wood with a wholesome piny odor. Close by a coal bin stood a blacking case with a gas jet above. She laughed as I looked at it and said: "The boys black their shoes down here; it saves much dust upstairs and seems to be the proper place. The boys like it."

There was a cocoanut mat at the foot of the stairs, which were carpeted with rope matting. The refrigerator stood on a platform by the side of the staircase.

I do not attempt to give a complete description and minute details. My purpose is to suggest, and to show that a cellar need not be an unpleasant place.

When we went upstairs my friend candidly confessed that with her one servant, and her many social duties her parlors were not always as well dusted as she wished, but she very well knew that the health and happiness of her family depended more on the wholesomeness of the house and food than on the condition of her parlor. Let me add what she did not say, that her parlor is always bright and cheery and everything in it bids one welcome. There are no triple or quadruple curtains to keep out the light, but just enough filmy drapery at the windows to soften, not to shut out, that beautifier and health-giver.

It is not necessary to tell what the kitchen must be under such a guiding hand. The one maid is happy there and thinks she has a beautiful home. A visitor, admitted to the kitchen on the maid's day out, exclaimed: "Why, your kitchen is like poetry!"

If our hearts are really clean, if refinement is really attractive to us, and our affection for our families of the truly helpful kind, will we not endeavor to make all parts of our homes clean rather than bizarre?

My friend is not a "household drudge." She has leisure, she is a pure-hearted Christian woman and—a club member!—The New England Kitchen.

CALLED HIM SISTER.

BY GEORGE T. ANGELL.

We remember fifty years ago, in a little New England town, an elderly lawyer, in small practice, whom his townsmen were accustomed to call "Sister Edes."

One day, having hired a man to work in his garden, he ventured to ask him, "Why do the people call me sister?"

"Well," replied the man, "I suppose they think you are rather a weak brother, and so they call you sister."

We remember also a great political convention at Worcester, in which a magnificent address of the late R. H. Dana, followed by another of a politician who was distinguished only for his tremendous voice, was described in a morning paper as a splendid exemplification of the triumph of mind over matter.

However it may have been in more barbarous ages in regard to women being regarded as the type of weakness, that time in the progress of education has long since gone by. The women who came to the front in the hospitals of our civil war—the women like Frances Power Cobbe and Harriet Beecher Stowe, and the authors of "Black Beauty," and "Beautiful Joe," and "Striking for the Right"—the philanthropists like Dorothea L. Dix, and Clara Barton with her red cross waving on so many battlefields—and the silver-tongued orators like Mary Livermore, Frances E. Willard, and others of that great army now known as "The World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union," but whose future name may be the much greater though shorter one, "The World's Woman's Christian Union," and whose flag seems likely to float around the world—not for temperance alone—but for everything described in the mottoes of our American Humane Education Society's seal "Glory to God," "Peace on Earth," "Kindness, Justice and Mercy" to every living creature—we say that through the influence of such as these the word sister is fast becoming a word not only of affection but of power, before which the controversies of religious sects, and the selfish chicanery of political parties, and the many wrongs that have so long hung over not only us, but the dumb creatures that depend on our care, may vanish like the pestilential malaria of midnight before the rays of the rising sun, and so the golden age come in.—Selected.

CHRISTMAS LAND.

Who has the key of Christmas Land?
Where the bonfire shines,
And the holly twines,
Carolers sing—a merry band—
And stars are bright o'er that fair strand—
Who has the key of Christmas Land?

Light are the hearts in Christmas Land.
In each group you meet
There are faces sweet.
Bosoms young and guileless are there,
And brows not yet wrinkled with care—
Who has the key of Christmas Land?

Dear baby hearts in Christmas Land,
We want to be near
And join in your cheer
When the tree with its strange fruit bends,
And you wait for what Santa sends—
Who has the key of Christmas Land?

Love has the key of Christmas Land.
Oh, come, Cherub Love,
With wings like the dove,
Spread over hearts thy light of peace,
Sow for a harvest full of increase—
Open the gates of Christmas Land!

Open the gates of Christmas Land;
There is much to do,
And the days are few.
Bid all men set charity free;
By Thy grace, let us see there be None of God's poor in Christmas Land.

THE "WHITE CLUB."

BY ESTELLE MENDELL.

"But my sisters don't smoke, nor my ma nor grandma," said Harry Gray, just a trifle angry because his playmates, Paul Bryan and Fred Eaton, said "it was wicked and awful nasty to smoke and chew tobacco," and then had told him that his father and brothers did both.

These three boys had been playing leapfrog and were now resting under the shade of a beautiful oak; and they fell to talking about matters and things very much as big folks do—though each was but about ten years of age.

"Most all men smoke," Harry went on, "that ain't anything so dreadful, but my ma and sisters are just as good as yours."

"My father and brothers don't smoke," said Paul Bryan in a way that showed he was very proud of the fact, "they're just as clean as my ma and my sister."

"Nor mine," added Fred Eaton.

"But men don't have to be so good and clean as women," said Harry, stoutly.

"Why not?" asked his mates earnestly.

"'Cause they don't," was the ready answer; "girls is girls an' boys is boys."

"Well, my teacher in Sunday-school says boys ought not to be rough or swear or smoke or drink any more'n girls; and when I asked papa about it he said she was about right."

It was Paul Bryan that said this and he looked as if he believed it, too, small as he was.

"Well, why do men and boys do it then, 'stead of girls?" asked Harry, looking very wise.

It was Paul's and Fred's turn now to answer "'cause," and they grew quite serious, for they could think of no good reason.

Just then the factory whistle blew and the boys ran for home and supper.

Harry Gray had a feeling that he had beaten his mates in their little talk, still for some reason, every man and boy he now met with a pipe or cigar in his mouth, seemed different from what they ever had before. They didn't look so clean and manly, and he could but think how dreadful it would seem if the girls and women he met carried a smoke-stack in their mouths, too.

Before bedtime some older heads were set to work at this puzzle by the boys' questions at the supper table.

Mr. Gray said in reply to Harry, "that he should feel very sorry to see his mother or sisters use tobacco, or Harry either."

"But what makes you and Frank and Tom use it then?"

At this Mr. Gray "'caused" and coughed and told Harry to stop his talk and fill up the woodbox for morning.

"He can't give a good reason," thought Harry as he went about his task, "and I believe Fred and Paul are right."

The other two boys, we are glad to tell you, got answers that helped them and made them more sure than ever that boys should be as clean and pure as girls.

"Oh, did you hear about Tom Burke's getting pretty near killed last night?" asked Harry, as the three playmates met the next afternoon under the oak.

"Yes," said Paul, "a horse an' wagon run into him an' his sister both, and the doctor says Tom'll die but Kate'll get well."

"I don't see why, long as they're both hurt just alike," said Harry.

"Well, the doctor told papa that Tom's blood was all poisoned and killed with liquor and tobacco, but Kate's wasn't, so she'd heal quicker."

"An' that's what teacher said, you know," added Fred.

"Well, I'm just going to tell papa," thought Harry, "if he does make me fill up the woodbox before it's time, an' I guess he'll think it's just as good for men not to smoke an' chew as women, when he hears this."

But Mr. Gray didn't tell Harry to stop talking and bring in the wood this time, but he said in a very kind and manly way:

"It's all true, my son," for you see he had been thinking over Harry's question, "and what do you say to starting a little society right here at home with the motto, that boys and men should be pure and good as well as women and girls?"

"All right, papa," cried Harry dancing for joy, "I'll join, an' so will Fred an' Paul an' a whole lot o' boys."

Now you know that when a lot of wideawake boys make up their minds to do a thing it is done; and that is the reason this little society, which they called "A White Life for Two," or "White Club" for short, grew and grew; and oh, how much good it did, not only among the boys, but the men as well, for it set them to thinking and made them ashamed of their bad habits; and more than one broke from them.

REAL CHILDREN.

The way in which children often miscomprehend the teachings of their elders is instructive as well as funny. It is so difficult for us to realize how many words and phrases, familiar to us, are meaningless to the small brain that we fail to see where he may get things wrong.

A small boy—Boston boy, too!—was brought up on the catechism, which says, "No mere man is able of himself to keep the commandments, but daily doth break them." The little pupil reeled this off very fluently, and it was not until he was nearly a man that his mother discovered his interpretation of the words. He thought the "commandments" were some kind of playthings, and "daily" was somebody who habitually went about breaking them. The moral, to his childish mind, was that you must be very careful to keep your playthings out of Daily's sight.

481. There is poison in the cup.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—You all know what a king is. He has a right to tell the people in his kingdom what to do, and everybody minds him because he is king. Should he see any one—a stranger from another country—doing harm to one of his people, he would say: "Let that man alone! What business have you touching one of my people?" And the bad fellow would have to stop pretty quick—that is, if the king had power enough to stop him.

There is a king, a noble, good-hearted king, though his face is black, who rules over a native people in Bechuanaland, South Africa. Do you find it on your map? It is called Khama's Kingdom, and that is the name of the king.

Not long ago the bad white men wanted to introduce intoxicating drinks among Khama's people, and he said, sternly, "You shall not sell this bad stuff to my people."

When they were bound to force their way in, he asked the British government to help him keep the drink sellers out. He is now in England with two other chiefs to do this. The names of the others are Sebele and Bathoen. They have visited Queen Victoria, whom they have asked to take them "under the shadowing" (as they call it) of England's great government.

Many of the English people are in favor of helping to keep the dreadful drink from Khama's land. Is it not strange that some of these same people do not care how much of the bad stuff is sold in their own country?

The chiefs, asked what they thought of England, have said: "We think with astonishment only of England, and beyond that we know not what to say. The people surpass the locusts in multitude, and the things they possess are innumerable. They work with their hands and their feet, with metals, with fire, with water, and even lightning. In music they use both hands and feet. Beyond the Lord Mayor's show we were astonished at the money in the bank. Such a thing we never thought of at home."

The London Missionary Society gave the chiefs a farewell on November 21, at the beautiful Queen's Hall in Langham Place, where our World's W. C. T. U. meetings were held. Lady Henry Somerset and Sir Wilfrid Lawson and others cheered and encouraged the three chiefs, who also spoke for themselves. Wasn't it fine that they all sang together, "God be with you till we meet again?"

Let us hope that the mother country will stand by and help when King Khama commands the bad men to keep away from his people.

Christmas is nearly here, and I wish you all a very merry time. Every Cozy Cornerer is invited to tell "How I spent Christmas." How many will do so? All right, send the letters flying this way!

GOING TO SEE MISS WILLARD.

As I saw my first letter in print, I thought I would write again. When I wrote before I forgot to tell you my youngest brother's name is Francis Willard. Mamma saw in the paper that Miss Frances Willard is coming to Texas. She said that she is going to see her, and said that I could go with her. As it is raining I will close my letter. With love to Cozy Cornerers,

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

DEAR FRIENDS:—As we enter upon the last month of 1895, and send to you holiday greetings, our thoughts turn to the many homes gladdened by your self-denying gifts, and we believe your Christmas carols will be more joyous if we give to you a little glimpse of the good accomplished by your and our "Philanthropy Fund" during the past year. An eloquent sermon lately called for self-denial to fill up the depleted treasuries of the missionary boards, and one familiar with the machinery of church work critically said, "That means an extra hundred or two from the regular systematic givers, but the masses will not respond by an extra nickel."

It is, indeed, too true that these frequent appeals touch the pockets of the few only, usually the same few, but so general and so universal have been the responses to our occasional appeals for the "Philanthropy Fund" that we feel these heart histories belong to all White Ribboners.

"DEAR OLD SIGNAL:—I have put off and put off the dreaded time of giving you up until circumstances are too imperative to neglect longer. I have had my last cry (for the time being, at least), and please stop the paper. Now, dear editors and contributors, I want to thank you for the righteous and pure temperance principles with which you fill your paper, for its columns of comforting strength and holy inspiration."

"From day to day I have thought I could send the money for THE UNION SIGNAL, but it is impossible. I hope to see better times, yet it looks so dark—perhaps it's close to-day."

It has often been said that business and sentiment should not go "hand in hand," and the establishment of this "Philanthropy Fund" has in 1895 admirably taken care of the sentiment side—literature sent from this fund being furnished at cost so that through this channel a dollar expended is more far reaching than in any other. One devoted temperance worker contributes annually ten dollars to this fund which is treated purely as a philanthropy and not in any sense a part of the regular business. There is a small balance still on hand, but a generous New Year's contribution would give to many a hungering soul the comfort and help and inspiration of THE UNION SIGNAL and other temperance literature during the year 1896.

* * *

Our Christmas stock is nearly exhausted but we have on hand one of the choicest books of the season especially adapted for New Year's gifts, "Something to Remember, an Every Day Book for the Children of the Good Shepherd's Fold," chosen and arranged by Rose Porter, author of "Gift of Love," "Life's Everydayness," etc. It contains a sentence from the Bible and a thought from some favorite author for each day in the year. Price sixty cents. There have been many of these books compiled but none have sweeter or more helpful selections than those by Rose Porter. With best wishes for a happy Christmas, Yours sincerely,

CAROLINE F. GROW, Bus. Mgr.

IT CAN BE DONE.

Bad men are withheld from voting for prohibitory laws because they drink liquor or derive profits from its sale. Good men have been against it chiefly through ignorance, party blindness or a stolid but honest belief that prohibition does not prohibit.

We have tried to prove the contrary by holding up before them the object lessons of Maine, Vermont, Kansas and the local option areas of the South, but to this they replied that these were exceptional instances and that to enforce prohibition in our large cities was precisely what could not be done. To answer this objection was practically impossible, as no large city in the Republic was under prohibitory law. Just at this juncture Theodore Roosevelt appeared on the scene, and as chief of the police commissioners of New York city, with its two million of inhabitants, he has now proved beyond all question that prohibition can be enforced in our largest city, which to complete the force of the illustration is the city of the largest percentage of foreign population. Before this was done nobody would have believed it possible. If a white-ribbon woman had dared to say that it could be accomplished she would have been hooted at as a fanatic, or derided as one who, if her visionary ideas were carried out, would raise a riot in the metropolis. But here are some of the cold facts, and the figures that will not lie:

Three thousand saloon-keepers have been indicted, and nearly all of them have suffered the penalty of the law; two hundred houses of ill-fame have been closed, and "the abomination of desolation" was never under ban in New York city as it is to-day; sixty gambling houses have been shut up, and the accursed thing is now publicly unknown in New York city.

President Roosevelt, who is a man well known for the exceeding care with which he puts forth any statement, says that Sunday crime has fallen off fifty per cent.

Good men are pondering these facts,—they cannot help it. The press, religious and reformatory, keeps the subject before them, and even the great dailies, sold under sin as they are, cannot avoid making some allusion to the wellnigh miraculous change that has come over the face of Gotham. Neither can the patriotic citizen fail to be impressed by another fact, viz., that New York has recently held the most orderly and honest election known to its annals, and that the "free liquor" of the past was then and there replaced by a free ballot and a fair count.

It is now in order for the Prohibitionist to renew the questions he has often asked: Is not the prohibition law, taking the country over, enforced as well as the law against bribery, or the law against carrying secret weapons, or even the law against petty larceny or defamation of character, or any one of a dozen other laws that might be named? And yet though imperfectly enforced, you would not dream of taking any of these laws from the statute book. The proof is before you, written so large that he who runs may read, that the laws are not at fault, but that men who swore to defend these laws were public perjurers. What we need is the officer behind the ordinance, the law-enforcer back of the law. But this final force can be had only by voting him into power for the express purpose of enforcing law, and this must be done by a "movement" with that thing in view, and such a movement when it is begun is called a "reform," and when it is completed it is called a "party."

What we want is the Home Protection Party for the protection of the home. Nothing more will serve our purpose and nothing less. Like all great statements this one is simple, but until our voters learn it by heart the liquor traffic, the gambling hell, the house of infamy will continue to rule and ruin the young men of the nation and degrade its municipalities to the level of "habitations of cruelty." We must then "make a chain, for the land is full of bloody crimes and the city of violence." Voter, will you be one link in that strong chain? Choose—thy choice is brief—and yet endless.

THE APOLOGETIC ATTITUDE.

One can scarce help wondering why the "mills of the gods" should grind so slowly.

When the time seems more than ripe for a measure of reform; when there is sufficient sentiment in its favor—sufficient power to execute, why this reluctance to strike hands in a common cause? Why do not the forces fall into line? One would expect an upspringing enthusiasm, every man striving to outstrip his fellows. There is nothing like the simile of a slow grind to describe the scarcely perceptible movement toward a righteous combination. And it is sometimes difficult for those of "true faith, strong minds and ready hands"—not dull of ear, slow of brain and sluggish of limb, but quick to respond to the rallying cry—hard for these to distinguish friend from foe.

Coldness, criticism, almost persecution, is encountered from those who should naturally be allies, who, in fact, will not admit that they are not in some sort of fashion on the right side.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union frequently encounters such a condition. It is worse than an active enmity in its cold, clammy, wet-blanket effect and our women succumb to it too easily. After all, when analyzed it is apt to resolve into nothingness; when met on equal ground with neither cringing nor defiance the opposition is generally found to be of a general, theoretic sort not intended for individual application.

How many unions will tell of the hatred and contempt with which they are regarded, yet how almost certain it is that the conditions are exaggerated by imagination and that much of the trouble lies in the lack of a self-respecting, straightforward independence on their own part. We may sometimes err by standing too much on the defensive and creating unwise and unnecessary antagonism, but too much humility is the principal vice of many unions. It is certain that opportunities are lost because of being too poor spirited to ask for privileges for our cause.

The opening of one of our minor conventions was set for the evening of Decoration day. "Let us," said one, "invite the G. A. R. Post to join us in appropriate exercises." The women looked doubtful but the motion prevailed. "I do not suppose they will think of such a thing," said another, expressing the general conviction. There was nothing preposterous in the proposition; it was made to the personal friends of those old days which will live long in song and story. The invitation was readily accepted, the veterans came in a body, listened with marked appreciation to one of our women of National reputation and paid one-half the expenses of the occasion.

The women of a certain city felt very fearful about venturing to invite their county convention; they did not believe they could secure the use of a church and they knew that the newspapers would not make announcements unless paid by the line. But the county president urged the appointment of a committee to solicit the use of one of the prettiest, albeit one of the most conservative churches in the town and called on the editors herself. All requests were cheerfully granted; the pastor acted as host throughout the session; the program was printed in full and extended reports published of all the exercises.

Who can tell how much is lost by those who "fear their fate too much!" It is one of the commonest of our faults to be too deprecatory in the presentation of our cause.

In a press notice not long ago one of our truest-hearted women called attention to a coming speaker as one "able to say something new even on the time-worn, frayed-out subject of temperance." Now, it is not such to her. What she said was in concession to the element which raises that cry because it does not enjoy the stirrings of a conscience it is determined not to heed.

A gifted young speaker in one of our public schools recently lamented the decay of eloquence. How can men be eloquent when all the discourse is of taxes and gold and silver, and protection is invoked for naught but our material interests! But eloquence is not dead. Never has oratory risen to nobler heights; its message is not of bi-metallism or import duties or the mulct tax; the men and women who play upon our heart-strings have a nobler theme than finance or the tariff; they plead humanity's cause and assail its deadliest foe.

Our theme is no more "worn out" than were the unwelcome deliverances of Jeremiah—cannot be while the occasion for its presentation exists. It is a living issue—the burning question of questions, the theme of all others on which the orator can still be eloquent and move men's hearts. "Time-worn, frayed out!" So is the gospel old, but that will be our theme in glory, and this other will always be a living question until settled, and "settled right."

A GREAT MOVEMENT.

It has just been formally announced that the American University at Washington, D. C., will have a College of Scientific Temperance. This will cause rejoicing on the part of all seekers after truth, and we believe that the joy will be ever increasing as the years go by. The art of living is a vital question in the world's progress. It must be solved by serious research and experiment. The correlated findings of such a college of experts, the greatest the world has to offer, will, in time, give sure basis for the conclusions of the people upon questions most related to their health and happiness.

Some time ago a petition was presented to the trustees of the American University signed by many representative American citizens of all parts of the land, including governors, treasurers and secretaries of states, judges of the supreme and other courts, state and national legislators, state and local superintendents of public instruction, presidents and other officers of universities and colleges, members of the medical profession and of boards of health, authorized representatives of the great religious bodies irrespective of denomination, and others.

This petition asked that there might be created a department of the American University for such original investigation, study and instruction as would furnish to the country the needed teachers of teachers in the new and almost universally mandatory branch of public school instruction in temperance physiology and hygiene.

The result is that an agreement has been entered into between the university and the Temperance Educational Association whereby, when the sum of $250,000, or such lesser sum as shall be deemed by the board of trustees sufficient for the beginning of the work of said school shall have been furnished, there shall be inaugurated a department of the university to be called "The College of Scientific Temperance," which shall be a college of investigation and instruction in physiology, hygiene and pathology, with special reference to the nature of alcohol and kindred substances, together with their effects upon mankind, and including the following studies as they are related to the purpose of this college; viz., toxicology, chemistry, biology, psychology, ethics, criminology, law, political economy, reformatory measures and pedagogy, with such other studies as may be found necessary.

Consider for a moment. This university proposes an endowment of ten millions of dollars for itself; it is to do only post-graduate work. Original research and experiment are its realms of operation. It will give its findings to the world as fast as made. Its matriculates will have access to the great libraries and other aids to be found in Washington. It has Bishop John F. Hurst, LL.D., as its Chancellor; Rev. Samuel L. Beiler, Ph. D., as Vice-Chancellor, and a large board of trustees composed of experienced business men and educators, representing many denominations and different sections of the country; and in the educational association are the following: W. T. Harris, LL.D., United States Commissioner of Education; Mary H. Hunt, superintendent scientific temperance instruction; A. H. Plumb, D. D., Joseph Cook, LL.D., Daniel Dorchester, D. D., William A. Mowry, Ph. D., William E. Sheldon, T. D. Crothers, M. D., I. N. Quimby, M. D., L. D. Mason, M. D., Josiah Strong, D. D., Jesse B. Thomas, D. D., W. C. Roberts, D. D., and Bishop E. R. Hendrix, D. D.

The movement is neither partisan nor sectarian. The college will not be founded as a propaganda, but as a scientific school whose sole object will be to find and inculcate whatever may be the truth touching the subjects of investigation. The originators of the scheme are broad minded enough to wish the best talent among specialists to seek facts entirely untrammeled. This is a new departure which will meet the practical needs of the times, and we believe that thoughtful men and women will hasten the opening of the college by a speedy investment of the requisite sum of money, which will make a return of far greater value than silver or gold. This provision will be recognized as the greatest yet made along the line of an educational preventive for the ills that come to mankind through the use of narcotics, through ignorance of the nature of substance and their effects, through ignorance of the laws of life, of economics, political economy, and the experiments of the past in law, criminology, and reformatory measures. We believe this college will introduce an era in the world of reform something like that introduced, or at least formulated by Bacon for the world of general knowledge; for the object of this college is "fruit—the improvement of the condition of mankind."

Quibbles have been indulged in concerning all important subjects, rather than earnest questionings; we have had false premises and futile reasoning, we have had plenty of speculation and vain imaginings, but the moral sky is now overcast with portentious clouds that indicate an approaching storm. Just as wave after wave of free thought burst with terrific force against the time-worn scholasticism of the fifteenth century, even so the farmer, the miner, the merchant, the mechanic, the schoolmistress, the mother and the little ones are thinking along new lines to-day. They demand to know what has been done, what can be done, and how to do it. We shall ask of the great scientists that man this college that they expose the childish wisdom of the past, in so far as it has been childish, that they make experiment and thought useful to the end that the political, religious, and scientific world may be revolutionized, so far as they ought to be revolutionized, and that the common people may be instructed to their own salvation.

RED CROSS HELP FOR ARMENIA.

Information reaches this country through mission boards and other sources that the number of destitute Armenians is between 350,000 and 500,000, mostly women and children. Such widespread want, Miss Barton says, can be met only by relief funds running int the millions. The following letter from Miss Willard, enclosing one from Mr. Gulesian, has just been received:

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am sending you a letter from that noble Armenian who spoke to us in Baltimore. I hope you will publish it with an earnest appeal to our state presidents to act at once in the endeavor to influence city and state officials, churches, associations and influential persons to telegraph, write and petition our government at Washington to arrange for the Red Cross representatives to have safe conduct to the devastated valleys of Armenia.

We cannot act too soon or with too much earnestness.

Always yours,

Frances E. Willard.

Louisville, Ky., December 12.

The following from Mr. Gulesian is the letter referred to:

MY DEAR MISS WILLARD:—I have telegraphed to you relative to the Red Cross Society. We have seen Miss Clara Barton in Washington, and asked her if she would take charge and enter Turkey to do relief work, which you know is urgently needed, and she said she would take charge if she had a unanimous call. Secretary Olney approves of the plan and we are doing all we can to induce her to go. The American and Presbyterian Boards have already appealed to her.

We would be very grateful to you if you would urge her, as president of the W. C. T. U., and if you will do what you can to influence the city and state officials, or other bodies, in Chicago or any other part of the West.

The Red Cross Society can do a great deal in Turkey, as the massacres of last month have been much more destructive than the Sassoun massacre, and unless instant relief is given thousands of women and children in the highlands of Armenia will die of hunger and cold this winter. We feel that the society could not enter any work more urgently needed than this.

You may not remember me, but I am the Armenian who spoke at the Baltimore Convention. Thanking you for the ever ready sympathy you have shown, I remain, Yours faithfully, M. H. GULESIAN.

Boston, December 8.

The American Red Cross Society has already decided to accept the duty of distributing relief funds for the sufferers and has issued the following statement:

Owing to the unanimous and urgent appeals from the friends of humanity, representing nearly all of the people of this country, the American National Red Cross has decided that it must accept the sacred trust of endeavoring to relieve the starving Armenians in Asia Minor. According to conservative estimates there are three hundred and fifty thousand utterly destitute people in that country who will have to be assisted six or eight months (until the next harvest). Fully realizing the difficulties and dangers to be met, the Red Cross will start for Turkey as soon as sufficient funds are placed at its disposal, or guaranteed, to insure success. Funds may be sent to Miss Clara Barton, president and treasurer of the American National Red Cross, Washington, D. C. Authorized agents to receive funds and materials will be published in a few days. The Red Cross also suggests that goods, grain, and other material may be sent by chartered steamer.

CLARA BARTON, Pres.

The above announcement makes it certain that the party, including Miss Barton, will leave immediately after being assured of a sufficient sum to carry forward the work, but it will take five weeks for them to reach the distressed districts, and the demands of the starving people are urgent. We believe the state presidents of the W. C. T. U., Conferences of Unions, and unions, will respond to this cry of distress. First of all get officials of your state and city, churches and associations, to urge our government to act at once in providing safe conduct for Miss Barton and her workers, as Miss Willard suggests; and second, send the wherewithal which will make it worth while for them to go. The sword, famine, pestilence, hang over the heads of the Armenian Christians that remain. They will do their work quickly. We could not be last at the cross or first at the sepulcher, but we may hear, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Every town and city in the United States will respond with money and grain if some one will take the lead in making the call for contributions. We know our sisters will be ready to do their part. Let them wait for no one, but work with a "red hot needle and a scorched thread," and a prayer in their hearts.

MR. HENRY S. ALLEN, of New York city, is exploiting the idea of the purchase of Palestine by the Christian world. He has appealed to the public through the press, and personally to Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard for their coöperation. He thinks there is need of a new crusade by which the locality from whence the faith came that has made so many nations great may be preserved, and offers the following in support of his plan: "The rush of modern progress threatens to put the Holy Land on a level with Oklahoma or Boom City. We may have a 'Wild West' in Bethlehem, 'Sunday Varieties' next the site of the Temple of Jerusalem, a railroad depot on Calvary, and a baseball in Sinai Park." Miss Willard says in reply, that if she were a millionaire Jerusalem would soon be delivered from the hand of the Turk, and that ever since she first saw its gray walls rising through the twilight of a spring evening in 1870, she has felt that the Christian world ought to hold to its heart the beloved city of Jesus and His mother and the disciples, and that she can be counted on for anything she can do to advance the effort so full of holiest Christian sentiment.

At a conference recently held in Maidstone, England, a resolution offered by Mr. Jesse Hawkes was passed declaring that the time had arrived when all sections of the church should decline to receive money from brewers, distillers, wine merchants and publicans.

Mrs. Sarah Tudor, of Baltimore, Md., has recently passed to the better country. From the first she was a prominent figure in our W. C. T. U., full of energy and enterprise. But she will longest be remembered by the leaders of the movement on account of her devoted work for THE UNION SIGNAL. Perhaps no woman in the country made intelligent and constant efforts to secure new subscribers for the paper. It seemed as though she never allowed an opportunity to pass, and if just one woman in each local union had her persistence and loyalty along the line that characterized Mrs. Tudor for well-nigh a score of years, our official organ would have the largest subscription list of any paper in the world. It would be a heart's ease, indeed, if by some magical power her mantle might fall on ten thousand women in as many of our local auxiliaries.

It is a significant fact that the most famous theater in the world—the Theater Française in Paris—has issued orders that no lady be admitted that wears a bonnet, hat or a large coiffure. This will undoubtedly be taken up by the theaters in general, and will thus become a custom among those who set the fashions, to the better health and greater comfort of all concerned.

This was the second annual meeting held by the school in commemoration of the organization of the W. C. T. U. in that church, twenty years ago. The program was a varied one, and included a solo, entitled, "Lucy at the Spring," descriptive of the meeting of Miss Lucy Webb-Hayes and Rutherford B. The General Fisk Junior Prohibition League in Philadelphia passed some very ironical resolutions lately, and sent a copy to our Chieftain, with a facetious letter. Evidently this fine League thinks of "us folks" as "fellow citizens." Their resolutions were founded mainly on the quoted saying of the president of the New York Social Reform Club, "By a fixed rule of political economy, if workmen cease to spend money on drink, their wages would, on the average, be reduced accordingly." They resolved to urge all workmen to spend their wages for drink, as the more they spend the better off they will be; and Democrats and Republicans, churches and temperance societies were exhorted to square themselves accordingly, and the Prohibition party to apologize in sackcloth and ashes for its advocacy of the abolition of the liquor traffic, etc.

On Duty.

THE LEADER OF THE W. W C. T. U. FOOD REFORM MOVEMENT.

Miss May Yates, the superintendent of the new Food Reform department of the World's W. C. T. U., is the founder of the Bread Reform League, a purely uncommercial association, organized to spread a knowledge of wholesome, nourishing foods.

Miss Yates was induced to take up the subject of Food Reform through a visit she paid to a school-fellow who had married and settled in Italy.

On her way out she met a lady who was a vegetarian and who said she had not felt the want of meat after she had taken to the use of whole meal bread. Miss Yates noticed when she got to Italy that the people were strong and healthy without meat when they had this whole brown meal bread. This fact was especially impressed on her mind by her friend's statement that as the washerwomen on the vineyard said they could not work on the white bread she used, she was always obliged to supply them with whole meal bread. Miss Yates had also noticed that the fellaheen in her father's Egyptian factory were quite strong and well without meat.

Before leaving England Miss Yates had been much impressed with the badly nourished condition of England's poor people, especially the children. She thought what a blessing it would be if these poor people could get whole meal bread, and on her return to England, feeling impelled to take up the subject, Miss Yates gave up her artistic studies (although she already had exhibited pictures in the Royal Academy, the Grosvenor and other galleries) sold her jewels to raise funds, and with the assistance of Sir Benjamin Richardson, F. R. S., and the late Samuel Morley, M. P., founded the Bread Reform League.

One of the first meetings was held at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. The late Earl of Shaftesbury, Professor Huxley and many prominent men of science took part in the organization, while the Prince and Princess of Wales showed great interest in the movement.

About this time there was a great agitation in London about over pressure among school children. Miss Yates and her friends were strongly convinced that the suffering was caused by under feeding and not by over pressure, so the Bread and Food Reform League united with the London Vegetarian Society in organizing half penny dinners for school children. The dinners consisted of vegetarian soup and whole meal bread and cake. This plan has been adopted in the board schools, and is now being carried out on an extensive scale by a central committee representing various philanthropic societies, under the chairmanship of Mrs. A. F. Hills, whose active work and munificent support to this and other charitable work has done an incalculable amount of public good.

Miss Yates then became the organizing secretary of the London Vegetarian Society, in which capacity she directed much attention to vegetarianism in England, and also held large meetings in Belgium, where her knowledge of French enabled her to arouse much interest in the subject.

She also visited America where she organized the Vegetarian Congress and arranged the Vegetarian Annex at the Columbian Exposition.

While in Chicago Miss Yates became very much interested in the idea of what could be done by a federation of the English speaking people, so when she returned to London she gave up organizing and took up lecturing, devoting especial attention to this subject and the promotion of united work between all philanthropic societies.

Her lectures are given in the form of pictorial monologues, a unique combination of dramatic recitations and limelight views which have proved very attractive.

A tour was arranged last year in New Zealand and while there Miss Yates obtained the active support of the New Zealand W. C. T. U.

Her works had gone before her and at Christchurch she had the pleasure of finding that one of her leaflets had been distributed there five years ago by the W. C. T. U. Miss Yates joined the Auckland branch and induced the committee to forward a resolution to their annual convention advising the formation of a food reform department for the especial purpose of spreading a knowledge of the advantages of whole meal bread and fruit.

This was adopted and as the World's W. C. T. U. Convention met in London shortly after Miss Yates' return to England, the New Zealand W. C. T. U. authorized Miss Yates in conjunction with their delegate, Mrs. Sheppard, to bring forward the subject of a world's food reform department. Sir Benjamin Richardson, M. D., F. R. S., drafted the following resolution: "As it is now recognized that inebriety is continually the result of diseased conditions produced, in a large measure, by injudicious and insufficient diet, it is resolved that a World's Food Reform Department be established to deal with all questions relating to food and to diffuse a scientific knowledge of the nature of food." This resolution was unanimously adopted by the executive and describes the lines on which the department will be organized.

Miss Yates has arranged to hold a series of important conferences in Belgium, in November, and is organizing other work in England and France.

WORLD'S DEPARTMENT OF SCHOOLS OF METHODS.

In a great organization, such as the World's W. C. T. U. has grown to be, it is very desirable that the workers who are working for the same ends should, as far as possible, work on harmonious lines and after similar methods. In order to facilitate this, it was decided at the last Biennial Convention of the World's W. C. T. U. to form a department for Schools of Methods, with the object of educating our workers in all the best methods of carrying on our great reform. The idea of these schools is to illustrate in a practical way the plans of work that have been found most successful by the different workers, to explain difficulties and suggest remedies, and in every way thoroughly to furnish each worker for the part she is called upon to fill.

These schools would be conducted somewhat on the following lines:

1. A parliamentary drill would be given to show how business should be conducted in all our public meetings, according to regular parliamentary rules.

2. A model branch or union meeting would be held to illustrate how local business meetings could be best conducted.

3. Reports on the different departments of work would be given by specialists in each department, who would seek to illustrate by blackboard exercises and otherwise, the best way of working their own particular departments, with a history of the development and results of each.

4. A question box would be provided, into which questions relating to any part of the work could be put, to be answered at the close of the meeting by the leader of the school, or some other suitable person.

As these schools are intended for the education of workers, it is very desirable that all who enroll themselves as scholars, should come prepared to give earnest attention to the proceedings.

In many places a small fee is charged each scholar, and while this helps defray the expenses of the school, it also has the effect of making the scholars value more highly the instructions they receive.

It is hoped that our associations everywhere will arrange for schools on these lines. All necessary information, including, if desired, programs of exercises, will be supplied on application to Miss Helen L. Hood, associate superintendent, 91 Victoria street, Westminster, London, England.

HELP JUST A LITTLE.

The World's W. C. T. U. Evangelistic Training School has just set up housekeeping, and needs everything that anybody else would need for a like undertaking. In its eagerness to help everybody get ready for the best service, it offers board for two dollars a week, merely enough to cover the cost of food. Some of its best students are unable to pay even that.

If every one who cares for the school will "help just a little," the house will soon be comfortably furnished, and there will be no lack of table supplies. There will also be plenty of food and clothing for the very poor among whom our students do their practice work.

Everybody admires the unselfish zeal of the "sweet girl graduates" who live in the slums, working for the needy and neglected. Our World's W. C. T. U. Training School comes in for its share of similar appreciation.

Our resident students are ladies whose "book learning" is up to grade. They have put themselves under drill to get their powers in hand. At the same time they do from one to two hours a day of practice work among the poor in the vicinity of the school. By that means they are equipped with something more than fine theories about "reaching the masses." Since nine-tenths of the sin and suffering about us come from strong drink, they have the opportunity of growing skillful in the use of the weapons of our warfare.

We believe this "College Settlement" of ours will win a warm place in the hearts of all good temperance women.

Every one who will send to the school money, food or house furnishing, worth not less than a half dollar, will receive a copy of the booklet entitled "A Prince of the Realm, Lessons from the Life of Rev. W. C. Willing, D. D.," as a token of appreciation of the gift. Contributions may be sent to

MASSACHUSETTS.

A REPORTER'S OUTING.

From Massachusetts to Maine, and especially from Boston to Portland, is a refreshing change to a temperance annalist. To go from the atmosphere of the licensed liquor traffic to a region where the saloon is outlawed is to breathe more easily and in a vacation sense. If from the nature of its surroundings any city could afford the awful alcoholic taint it would be the beautiful city of Portland. It is wind-swept and purified by fresh breezes from mountain and sea. Far off in the horizon, seventy-five miles away, presides Mount Washington, the hilltop sentinel of this seaport city, truly the most islanded harbor of the world. Portland is the home of Neal Dow and our Vice-president Stevens. What a comfort it must be to these temperance stalwarts to traverse the fresh, clean streets! It is said that behind green curtains the evil lurks, but the bottles and barrels are not in sight. The man that is found drunk, whether high citizen or low, is carried off in the patrol wagon, and this to the "better class" is an indignity that is in itself a protection against a repetition of the offence.

AFFAIRS AT HOME.

It is time to introduce Mrs. Ruth B. Baker, the new corresponding secretary of Massachusetts—a choice specimen of a genuine New England Woman. It fell to her lot to represent Massachusetts, and the Massachusetts president, Mrs. Fessenden, (detained at home) at the Baltimore National Convention. The state contingent, as also the National executive, felt that it was most acceptably done. The corresponding secretary is also editor of Our Message, the state paper, and Mrs. Baker has sent copies of her initial number to every W. C. T. U. member in the state. This, with other aggressive measures, gives token of advanced work. "Permanent headquarters" is one of the watchwords of the year, and a committee, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, chairman, has the matter under advisement. It looks as if sometime we should get out of "our own hired house."

The Boston union has a new president, Mrs. Mary E. Cheney, or as we sometimes call her in Massachusetts "UNION SIGNAL and Our Message Mrs. Cheney." As state superintendent she has kept these organs blowing and we do not anticipate that her zeal will flag with the cares of office.

We are in the midst of our annual license or no-license hubbub. Perhaps there is more union in effort and an increase of workers. Representatives of the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League and the Baptist Union are entering heartily into the work. The Christian Endeavor vow of citizenship commits the society to "work for the extermination of the saloon:" also records the belief that to vote is to testify, and the ballot should witness for political righteousness. Our unions are at work of course, and many of the pastors coöperate, preaching upon the subject prior to election and urging the people to vote no. There is not much hope for Boston, but the girdle of no-license cities is likely to continue—Cambridge, Somerville (has never granted license), Chelsea, Quincy, Newton. Also Brockton and Pittsfield will doubtless remain clean cities, while Springfield and Worcester continue in their license thralldom. Municipal elections include the vote of women upon the school question. The ticket of the Independent Women Voters and the Republicans is the same with one exception. We can vote for school committee, but Massachusetts has decided that it is not expedient that municipal suffrage be granted to women. "Yes," was the answer from 120,000 voters, men and women, about one-third of the men voting in favor. The total majority against was 76,944, and there were 11,160 men who did not vote either way. Out of every one hundred women ninety-six voted yes. The Woman's Journal says "the largest affirmative vote was given in the best localities." Of the smaller towns fifty-five gave a majority for woman suffrage, and thirty more came very near a majority. Both the "Man Suffrage Association" and the "Woman Suffrage Association" find comfort in the summing up of the vote. President Eliot of Harvard is a prominent "man suffragist" versus woman. He has been known to say that "universal education is prolonged by suffrage. The duties of Republican citizenship rightly discharged constitute in themselves a prolonged education which effectually supplements the work of schools and colleges." Yes, indeed! Why deprive women of this supplementary education?

NOTES FROM PRESS SUPERINTENDENTS.

In response to a request sent out the following pointers have been received from press superintendents: Mrs. A. W. Thomas, Plymouth county, writes that it was voted in convention to have at least three conferences of presidents of local unions during the year. This county, as also the others, has been active in the Referendum campaign. Mrs. M. G. Weston, Brockton, is the genial, accomplished president, and also president of the Brockton union, one of the largest and best in the state.

Mrs. H. E. Sawyer, president and press superintendent, Worcester county, north, had "a large and enthusiastic convention," as she is apt to have. One hundred new members were reported, nineteen of these having been secured by a colored woman. When introduced she said,

"Give God the glory! I just asked Him where to go, and to prepare the hearts of the women, and He did." This convention made arrangements for two neighborhood meetings in most distant portions to hear reports from Baltimore.

The president of the sea-girt territory of Dukes and Nantucket, Mrs. Mary W. Valentine, writes encouragingly from her little field. The convention is apt to get out the most and best there is, for the four unions are all most and best!

Essex county, Jennie M. Pierce, Amesbury, press superintendent, sends a word indicative of duty done. "A Field Day," a School of Methods, etc., interesting and profitable to workers.

And thus you have a tithe, a specimen at least, of what is going on in Massachusetts.

MINNESOTA.

TEMPERANCE NEWS.

Lake City union, which had dropped press work for a time has taken it up again, the direct result of a lively discussion on press work in the county convention, and a little talk from the county press superintendent. The editors of the town, hearing of what was said there, came and offered space. I wish the reporter of this item had told us what it was that was said, so that some one else could use it to induce other editors to take such a gratifying course. South Troy union had to give up their column in one paper because "the saloon people didn't like it and would stop their papers." But another paper recently started in the same village solicited contributions from the union. Wabasha county, with three unions, supplies five papers with temperance news.

Delavan union deserves to succeed and will, without doubt. It held entertainments and earned money to send all officers and delegates to the state convention, and of course they came back full of zeal. In October they had an entertainment by the Metonga Lake Sextette, in connection with a lecture by Mr. G. Ratcliff. The local papers spoke in the highest terms of both the musicians and speaker; one paper even said that "unless one of the old parties takes some measure in the direction of temperance, something may drop—probably the parties."

District No. 5 certainly deserves credit for its faithfulness in reporting work done. Mrs. Van Curran, state organizer, has been at work in this district with gratifying success. She remained several days in Edgerton and held a parlor meeting and gave a public lecture; new members were added to the union and some have joined since. This town has also had the Metonga Lake Sextette and Mr. Ratcliff with excellent results.

Jasper union has been doing active work. Some time since a public meeting was held, addressed by Mrs. E. C. Frisbee, county president, and Mrs. Mattie S. Bull. Mrs. Frisbee made an effective appeal for temperance work and Mrs. Bull spoke upon the national outlook from a W. C. T. U. standpoint. Mrs. Van Curran was also present and gave an entertaining address. Later the union conducted a silver medal contest, which brought out a large audience. The medal was awarded to Miss Fannie Finley, and was presented by Mrs. Frisbee. Much credit is due to the county superintendent of contests, Miss M. E. Smith, as well as to Mrs. D. Jenckes, who arranged for the entertainment, and also to the two ministers, Mr. Deets and Mr. Gibbs, who trained the class. The vocal solos by little Cecil Lincoln were a pleasing feature of the program.

Redwood Falls union at a late mothers' meeting, invited the principal of the city schools and some of the primary teachers to address the mothers who were present in large numbers. Principal Race thought if parents and teachers would meet frequently in informal conferences, the public schools would be better and purer. Professor Torrens thought it well-nigh impossible to teach school boys the harmful effects of narcotics when they daily see members of the school board puffing cigars. Reports of these addresses and the discussions that followed gave interesting material for the temperance column of the local paper. This union is circulating a paper among the farmers in the vicinity to the effect that the oft used argument that the saloon exists for the benefit of the farmer patrons is entirely false and defames the character of the farmer. So far the number of signatures is very encouraging.

Atwater union has taken up a new line of work, and will endeavor to raise funds for sending drinking men to the Keeley Institute. Mrs. Coe, Judge Branham and Mr. Nordin have all lectured in Atwater, and others are coming.

Litchfield union rejoices in large attendance at the regular meetings and in several new members including some honoraries. The birthday of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton was observed, and especial interest attached to it because one member of the union, Mrs. N. H. Heard, was personally acquainted with Mrs. Stanton.

Wadena union held a gold medal contest some time ago, and also a silver medal. At the annual meeting they had several new members. At the beginning of the school year they held a reception for the teachers, inviting the school board with their wives to meet them.

The Minneapolis ministers have held some very interesting meetings discussing the evils of saloon, gambling house and brothel. Nor have they stopped short at discussion. A committee was appointed to investigate the actual situation and confer with the mayor. That gentleman promptly and positively declared his disbelief in any open gambling being carried on in the city, and continues to declare it in face of the most damaging evidence. He expressed strong doubt about closing the saloons on the Sabbath. The committee reported back, and the ministers organized a Citizens' League, but the chairman of it has not yet taken any active measures. Meantime some of the ministers at least are doing their utmost to arouse their church membership to a sense of responsibility in the matter of clean government and enforcement of the laws.

And what of the saloons themselves? The saloon-keepers' association of the city, in convention assembled, resolved to obey the law of Sabbath closing during morning church hours, and break it all the rest of the day! And this in law abiding America! and Christian men and a Christian mayor stand meekly by and allow it! Shades of our Puritan forefathers, to what degradation have thy children descended! How long can a nation endure which thus tramples under foot the law of God and man?

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

SUNSHINE AND GOOD CHEER.

It would seem as though the charm and sunshine of Baltimore weather during the National Convention had spread all over the country, for it has been a rarely beautiful November here in New Hampshire, and bright and cheerful are the reports which come in from the unions all over the state.

Grafton county, under its wide-awake president, Mrs. G. W. Richardson, is always at work and from the convention held at Swiftwater, comes a full report. An address was given by Mrs. Frank Brown, of Whitefield, a delegate to the World's Convention in London.

A stirring appeal is at hand from the superintendent of work among lumbermen, with its account of great good accomplished in the past, and earnest demands for continued help in this department.

The Coos county unions unite in making a "Christmas Cheer" visit to their county almshouse on December 18; there are special services for the day with cut rates on the railroads for all who wish to attend. A most successful meeting is anticipated.

In Sullivan county, the Newport union has been most successful in raising funds for the "Mercy Home" improvements. Claremont union has also raised a handsome amount for this purpose, and reports largely attended meetings, with newly awakened interest in Y work, as a new Y union has just been formed there, by Mrs. P. P. Coburn, the state superintendent.

Derry union sends THE UNION SIGNAL to the six clergymen of the town, has sent twenty dollars to Mercy Home, and five dollars to the Temple. No open saloons in the town.

The W. C. T. U., of Peterborough, not long since gave a novel reception. To the cards of invitation a tiny bag of silk was attached, with the request that the recipients inclose as many pennies as their years might be. Dainty refreshments were served, a pleasant entertainment provided, and the treasury much increased, as two hundred invitations were issued.

An L. T. L. has just been formed at Raymond. Hampton Falls celebrated in October the anniversaries of its union and L. T. L., eight years for the former and four for the latter. They gave a most enjoyable free concert.

To your correspondent has come for the first time, the delightful and strengthening experience of attending the National Convention. The power of our leader, Miss Willard, the play of wit, the ready wisdom of our strong women all through the land, is indeed an inspiration, and with such earnest work, with such supreme devotion to the cause as they evince, and with God on our side, surely the saloon power must be soon overthrown in our dearly loved land.

ELIZABETH PARTRIDGE,

News in a Nutshell

MRS. S. M. PERKINS has just held a suffrage convention and contest in her district, at Rocky River, a suburb of Cleveland.

A VERY impressive Memorial Service was held November 24, for Mrs. Elizabeth Titus, late president of the Remington, N. J., W. C. T. U., a devoted Christian temperance worker, ever cheerful and faithful.

THE following officers were elected at the last territorial convention of Oklahoma: President, Mrs. Amelia Mentz, Perry: vice-president, Mrs. S. J. Mitchell, Enid; recording and corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. B. Olliver, Perry; treasurer, Mrs. C. C. Coil, Oklahoma City.

"How bes tto overthrow the liquor traffic" is the telling subject for prize essays at Wilna, Md. The Wilna union and H. J. Hollingsworth have generously offered premiums of five dollars and two dollars and one-half each for the first and second best essays to be written by the pupils of the public schools.

MISS BURNETT organized a Y of twenty-five members on Thanksgiving day at Canal Dover, O., and after it an Anti-Tobacco League of ten members. Both were made possible by the earnest efforts of Miss Anna M. Eaton, teacher of high school, and Professor Peiffer, superintendent of public schools. Both will largely increase in numbers.

WASHINGTON county, New York, Mrs. Julia H. Mason, president, held its semi-annual gathering at Fort Ann, not long ago. They had echoes from the World's Convention, a pleasing address by the state president, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, and gave evidence in every way that this county union is a link in the great W. C. T. U. chain which binds all nations.

THE third district Illinois W. C. T. U. has designed an attractive gold medal—the world bound by the white ribbon pendant from a bar—for use in its W. C. T. U. medal contests. It will also publish a book of attractive recitations mostly by W. C. T. U. women on temperance and allied topics, for use in these contests, which are to be conducted on the Demorest plan, with silver, gold and diamond medals.

DURING the temperance meeting of an evangelist, Rev. R. F. Kilgore, at Smithton, Ill., under the W. C. T. U. auspices as part of a revival, fifty white ribbons had been prepared for new additions, but so many came forward to sign the pledge that the evangelist's handkerchief was torn into strips for bows and more ribbon was sent for. The list footed up one hundred and twenty-six more souls "for God and Home and Native Land."

MRS. LOUISA DOW BENTON, daughter of Gen. Neal Dow, died at her home in Lancaster, N. H., December 7. For years Mrs. Benton had been a great sufferer but she bore her disease with triumphant patience. Confined to her bed for many years she constantly occupied herself with reading, writing and study and acquired great proficiency in several languages. As the great change approached she met it with cheerful resignation and quietly and triumphantly passed into that rest "which remaineth for the people of God."

THE FLOWER MISSION DEPARTMENT.

DEAR STATE SUPERINTENDENTS:—Grateful that so many states have adopted the flower mission and that a large majority of my loyal aids, the state superintendents, have accepted reappointment, I take pleasure in coming before you this year with plans both new and old.

Living in the land of almost perennial sunshine and flowers, I must not forget that for at least one-half the year the majority of our flower-missioners must substitute for flowers some other message of love and helpfulness, so let us first consider

PLANS FOR THE WINTER.

1. Visit the sick and lonely, leaving a fresh paper, or read to them a good story.

2. Visit the bereaved and sing them a comforting song or send your card with a Scripture text.

3. Make bright picture scrapbooks during rainy weather for the children's ward in county hospitals or for the weak-minded at county poorhouses.

4. Put up small dainty lunches in tasteful boxes. These may contain only a toasted cheese sandwich, a jelly tart or a couple of slices of homemade brown bread, but covered with a pretty Japanese napkin and sent in the name of the mission, will do good to soul and body. Don't forget to drop in a text card.

5. When you can personally visit the sick take along some such delicacy as egg lemonade, orange gelatine, oatmeal gruel or chicken jelly.

GENERAL PLANS.

1. I have not yet received enough "experiences" to publish the symposium which I desired, but hope to do so this winter. Please send at once, briefly written, one or more helpful incidents in connection with your work.

2. Please do not neglect to buy a little note-book and keep a record of the following deeds of love and charity (which is the same thing).

(a) The number of bouquets with Scripture texts distributed.

(b) Number of those who have been converted through the mission.

(c) Number of hours spent in reading to the sick.

(d) Number of baskets of food or clothing providing for the needy.

(e) Number of delicacies furnished, such as jellies, fruits, lemonade, buttermilk, etc.

(f) Number of sick taken out riding or on an outing.

(g) Number of scrapbooks provided for the children's ward in hospitals.

(h) Number of fans covered with Scripture texts and distributed.

(i) Number of pictures tacked on sick people's walls.

(j) Number of rocking chairs or hammocks loaned or given.

Let this note-book and its contents be for your own satisfaction. I do not expect to ask as many questions for my annual report this year as I did last, but with your coöperation I will aim to ascertain the most important feature of our department and its greatest blessing.

Faithfully yours,
ALICE L. SUDDUTH,
Colton, Cal. Nat. Supt.

HEALTH AND HEREDITY.

A NEW SONG BY AN OLD PIPER.

For a few years I have been piping to the great constituency of the W. C. T. U. on the subject of the franchise—equal rights and privileges in government for women. Now a new and truly more vital song has been put into my mouth. In imitation of the beloved disciple I write to you to say, "I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health." And let me add that we shall never prosper either as individuals, or in our temperance body politic, until we are in health. It is time to do a little renovating in our own bodies. One has to admit that the W. C. T. U. membership has in general a wholesome air, but there is room for improvement. This subject is bed-rock, not only in the temperance reform but in all that pertains to humanity—to full salvation, physical, mental and spiritual.

Of all our forty departments this is perhaps the most difficult to push in our unions. I feel perfectly sure of the sympathy of my predecessors in this respect. "What has health to do with temperance?" says the thoughtless woman, and the echo goes round. It has so much to do with it that if our homes and our government, national, state and municipal, were in health, our work would be done. A physician once said, "Every time one dies of typhoid fever somebody ought to be hung." On this principle, just think, when a drunkard dies how many people ought to be hung! And the members of the W. C. T. U. would not be altogether exempt!

We are but meagerly equipped for this work; we have no literature to speak of, and the workers are few. We need a complete outfit of lecturers, state superintendents, county, district, and local workers; we need to co-operate with associations and specialists who are working on this line; and we need unions so alive to this subject as to resolve themselves practically and permanently into Health clubs.

I appeal for

1. A letter from each of the state superintendents in the Health and Heredity department. What are you doing? What are you going to do? Suggestions.

2. A line from the corresponding secretary in states where there is no superintendent in this department.

3. The adoption of this department and appointment of a superintendent in states where this has not been done.

4. Co-operation with societies that have for their ultimate object better sanitary conditions; the promotion of health and the study of heredity.

Send to the National superintendent for "Suggestive Outlines of Work;" also for printed list of books, pamphlets, leaflets, journals, health magazines, etc., for health and heredity studies in the unions. This list is helpful in naming books for town and circulating libraries.

Subscribe for Dr. Mary Wood Allen's publication, The Mother's Friend, (50 cents) Ann Arbor, Mich. Dr. Allen is a health and heredity lecturer and co-operates heartily in this department.

Trusting for a wide and speedy response to this official communication, I remain,

Yours hopefully,

DEPARTMENT OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

COMRADES BELOVED:—I come to you a new worker, as you all know, and bring you my greeting. This department has been well organized, has had fine, capable leaders in the days gone by, and has been a success. Will you not help me to make it a success this year? We must all work, National, state, county or district, and local superintendents. We are all dependent one upon the other. Reports of work done must come to you from the rank and file, and from you to me. What can we do to help each other? What can we do to make the work even more of a success? Will you kindly send me your name and address, dear state superintendent? Will you let me know where you are filling your niche, and how you are filling it? Will you tell me of how the work is going on? "Watchman, what of the night?" I have written to every state president for the name and address of state superintendent, but I am so desirous of be-

Cor. Secy's Notes

We are all rejoicing in Miss Willard's triumphal tour through the South. Large audiences have everywhere greeted her and the enthusiasm has been as great as that which has always attended her on previous tours. In Lexington hundreds were turned away from the church, it being impossible for them to gain admission, and the crowd in Louisville was nearly as great. She goes to-morrow—the 12th—to Nashville; thence to Chattanooga and Knoxville. She is working with all her old time vigor as the following extract from a personal letter from Mrs. Beauchamp proves: "She is not sick, nor in poor health; it is all a mistake. It is this ceaseless grind of write, write, write all day. She gives off enough to kill a half dozen. She is a marvel of power and endurance; as much so physically as mentally." For which we all must say, "Praise God!"

The National Report is nearly completed, and will go to you all on or about the holidays. The Annual Leaflet will also be ready at the same time. A larger number of both will be printed this year, and we hope the demand may be commensurate with the supply. There can be no better way of creating public sentiment than the scattering abroad of these leaflets, giving, as they do, a condensed history of all our movements, principles and lines of work.

The announcement concerning L. T. L. prizes made in the last issue may be somewhat modified later, as a telegram just received from Mrs. Rice implies. Whatever the final decision may be, we shall seek to offer something that may prove the best possible incentive to state unions to work more energetically to increase their L. T. L. membership.

It has been exceedingly pleasant during the past few days to welcome at Headquarters some of the members of the National Prohibition committee, which is holding its annual session at the Sherman House. Your corresponding secretary and treasurer called upon them during their session on the 11th, together with Mrs. Metzgar and Mrs. Rounds, and presented a memorial, which will be given in full in another column. Mrs. Metzgar, it will be remembered, made the motion at Baltimore that a committee be appointed to formulate plans for political action during the coming quadrennial contest. The committee was appointed at the general officers' meeting, and consists of the general officers, Mrs. Ellis, superintendent of legislation and enforcement of law, and Mrs. Metzgar. This visit to the National Prohibition committee was the first step in carrying out the proposed plan.

It is now hoped to have a National school of methods in Willard Hall during the third week in February, with the general officers in charge and Mrs. Benjamin to give a series of her incomparable drills. The plan is not yet sufficiently matured to admit of definite announcement of program, price of tickets, etc., but we hope to be able to give all such points within the next fortnight. Meantime, will all unions near Chicago bear in mind that this is an opportunity which they cannot afford to let slip by unimproved. Plan to attend each session, and will those white-ribboners who are intending to come to Chicago for a visit this winter please arrange to cover these dates? The sessions will be made of the most practical nature possible, and I am sure they cannot fail to be an inspiration and a real help to all who are privileged to attend.

"A merry Christmas" to you each one, dear hearts, wherever you may be. I know many eyes will read these lines which have long looked love into mine, as well as many whom I know only by the oneness of heart which binds us together; but known or unknown, we are all friends, and may the hush of the holy Christmas tide bring us nearer to one another and to the Christ-child who, I trust, will be born anew in our hearts! Let us never forget that it is His kingdom we are striving to set up on earth, and that He is the life alike of that kingdom, and of those who seek its upbuilding.

Yours in His name,
KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

Treasurer's Corner

North Dakota has sent through its treasurer, Mrs. Wylie, of Drayton, for self-denial fund, $6, and for the Armenian fund, $18. Miss Eddy, of Providence, has sent a part of her contribution for colored work. A young railroad man who wishes to be called only "Frank" sends one dollar for the endowment of Miss National and writes, "I was much impressed with the article about the 'Consuelo dot' and your $1.00 to start an endowment. I send you another dollar to add to it. I have subscribed for THE UNION SIGNAL for seven years." No wonder he sends us a dollar. A young man that reads the SIGNAL seven years knows something of our needs. I wish he knew how much we appreciate such tokens of intelligent sympathy.

Miss Willard says in her annual address: "There are 2,700 counties in the United States. If under the law of systematic giving, which means brains applied to the pocket-book, one dollar were sent each year from each one of these counties, we could keep four capable workers in the field forming the helpful groups that centre around the White Banner inscribed 'for God and Home and Native Land.' Shall we ask our treasurer to try to get that dollar in the year to come, as a special fund for work on the frontier?" and this morning comes the first response to that practical appeal. Mary Almy Chase, of Hillsboro county, New Hampshire, sends her one dollar and says, "We trust it will be followed by 2,699 others, so the good work for God and Home and Native Land may go on in His name." Surely there is not a county in which does not reside some good friend of the W. C. T. U. who can and will send us $1.00 for work in needy fields.

Mrs. Sue F. Smith of Massachusetts, sends a donation of fifty cents to National. Mrs. Benjamin, president of Michigan, sends 100 cents as birthday. Who would have imagined her 100 years old? Ada W. Unruh sends her own birthday gift and also $1.00 for a son, who twenty-one years ago came to her home and stayed one year, brightening it as only a little one can do. Then he passed over into the heavenly home and has developed there where no sin or temptation can ever come, and his loving mother in gratitude for his pure life and the benediction it has been to her, commemorates his birthday by this loving remembrance of our work. The holidays are near. The store windows are full of attractions reminding us of the joyful season. The W. C. T. U. are all inclined to follow Miss Willard's suggestion, to give not to those who can in return give to us, but to give to those in need to whom gifts will be a rarity. Blessed Christmas to all.

News in a Nutshell

AT the New Jersey conference the Roseville Y conducted a model business meeting, presenting a minority report, a reconsideration and a motion to buy ice cream of Mr. B——, who sells cheaper, for their entertainment. A discussion followed because he sold on Sunday and the vote was no. Another motion was to send a vote of thanks to Mr. Malt for his donation of fifty dollars. Because he was a brewer and despite their need of funds, they voted no. An evening entertainment, entitled "Aunt Polly Bassett's Singing Skewl," was given by the Roseville Y to pay for an L. T. L. lesson in the orphan asylum every week.

THE National secretary of the White Cross Branch, National W. C. T. U. purity department, Rev. J. B. Welty, is working in Missouri. At Bolivar he gave four lectures and held afternoon meetings in connection with them. His work is characterized as most needed and excellent. One of the state officers writes: "Mr. Welty is a convincing speaker, a cultured, refined gentleman and pleases as well as convinces. He will not only bring about a more enlightened public sentiment but will increase the membership as well." Missouri is anxious other states should know of this worker whom Dr. Mary Wood Allen has selected to represent this department.

OF Mrs. Mary Seymour Howell, whose name appears among our National speakers, a friend of the W. C. T. U., has written: "I wish you might be able to enlist Mrs. Howell most thoroughly in the platform work of the union. She was one of the brave young girls in Crusade times, and alone, in her native village, went forth to do the work of prayer and appeal that nobody else dared to do. She is a womanly woman, earnest in her views of 'suffrage' and reform, but ladylike and considerate in the presentation of her views. She has been before the legislatures of New York, Connecticut, and other states, always commanding highest respect for her eloquence and ability."

scrofula

Any doctor will tell you that Prof. Hare, of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, is one of the highest authorities in the world on the action of drugs. In his last work, speaking of the treatment of scrofula, he says:

"It is hardly necessary to state that cod-liver oil is the best remedy of all. The oil should be given in emulsion, so prepared as to be palatable."

He also says that the hypophosphites should be combined with the oil.

Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil, with hypophosphites, is precisely such a preparation. Thus the latest and highest medical authority testifies to the great value of cod-liver oil emulsion in scrofula, especially when there is a family history showing weakness of the lungs.

RESPONSIVE READING for December presents to local unions the aims and the claims of the new department of "Christian Citizenship," and is written by the National superintendent of that work, Mrs. Anna F. Beiler. It tells when and where and why this department was created, enunciates the principles which underlie the movement, sets forth a plan of work and gives other helpful information and suggestions for the carrying forward of this new branch of W. C. T. U. work. Price one copy per year, 10 cents; 13 copies to one address, $1.

THE BIBLE READING for December is by Mrs. Anna M. Vail. Subject, "Scriptural Architecture." Our readers do not need to be told that this will be found a most helpful and instructive reading. It treats of (1) The Foundation, and (2) the Superstructure. The former, points out the writer, is the "Solid Rock" and is something we cannot manufacture for ourselves; it is already made for us—given to each to build upon. For the superstructure, we as builders are personally responsible. We must "take heed" how we build thereon. We must co-operate with the Master Builder. Price one copy per year, 12 cents; ten copies to one address, $1.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES OF WHITE RIBBON WOMEN. Contains brief biographies of the prominent W. C. T. U. workers of the world. PROFESSOR (to medical student): "Mr. Doselets, will you please name the bones of the skull?"

Student (perplexed): "I've got them all in my head, professor, but the names don't strike me at the moment."

"Do you prefer the romantic or the realistic novels?" "Why, I don't know. What's the difference?" "The first are about impossible events and the others are about impossible people."

To which he replied:

"GENTLEMEN:—Ever since I entered the ministry I have been struggling for the title of D. D. Go ahead.

"Now, children," said the teacher, "what do you call the meal that you eat in the morning?"

"GOOD gracious, Jehones! What has made your face and head so frightfully swelled up?" "A newspaper article." "I don't understand." "My wife happened to read a few months ago that bee keeping was a light and profitable occupation for a man with some leisure and a good-sized back yard."

NEAR Hartford, Conn., where the aged Harriet Beecher Stowe lives, they tell a good story of her small grandson. A neighbor found him swinging rather too vigorously on another neighbor's front gate, and warned him that Mr. Smith might not like it; whereupon the independent young gentleman remarked that "I don't care for Mr. Smith, or his ox, or his ass, or anything that is his." "Do you know who wrote those words?" asked the friend, deeply shocked. "Oh," was the nonchalant reply, "I d'no; Grandma Stowe, I suppose!"

"I SUPPOSE you are a Socialist, or Anarchist, or something?" asked the lady of vague ideas. "Madam," replied Mr. Brokedown Baldwin, "I am a passive altruist." "What in the name of common sense is that?" "I believe in being helped all I can."

Home Hints

Marion Harland says she knows this is an excellent relief for asthma. Soak blotting or tissue paper in strong saltpetre water. Dry and burn at night in your sleeping room.

Here is a suggestion worth trying. When boiling fruit, juices or custards, put into the preserving kettle five common marbles. As the heat increases the marbles roll about, and this has the same effect as stirring. When the marbles are used, it is safe to leave the kettle to boil without the constant watching otherwise necessary.

Columbian Gems:—Put into a saucepan a pint and a half each of milk and boiling water, and place over a moderate fire. When boiling hot, stir in slowly one cupful of yellow meal, which cook five minutes. Take from the fire, add one teaspoonful of salt, two of butter, and when cool, three eggs and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Bake in gem tins about twenty minutes.

A florist says that a pot of morning glories will bloom in the house; they will be sure to be in bloom when you get up in the morning, stay in bloom all day, and you will probably go to bed before they do. The winter blooming kinds will begin to bloom in thirty days from seed planting. If you have gathered seed plant what you have and it will be sure to please you.

Some people indulge in the very bad habit of pulling over the head the bed covers on cold nights. It is hardly necessary to say that it is an extremely unhealthful practice, if one stops to think of the impurity of the air thus taken into the lungs. An English physician says that deep and forced breathing through the nose, being careful to hold the air as long as possible before expelling it, will keep the whole body in a glow in the coldest weather. The deep respirations stimulate the blood currents by direct muscular exertion, and cause the entire system to become pervaded with the rapidly generated heat. This suggestion applies equally out of doors or in bed.

Cream candy. Half a cupful of cream and two cupfuls of powdered sugar, boil five minutes in a granite kettle, counting from the time the whole surface is boiling. Place the kettle in cold water and beat the syrup until stiff enough to hold candied fruit. To a quarter of the cream add quarter of a pound of candied fruit, cut fine, and pour into a breadpan, buttered or lined with paraffine paper. To the second quarter add one teaspoonful of vanilla and one small square of melted chocolate and pour it over the first layer. Color the third layer pink with cochineal and flavor with chopped almonds. Make the fourth layer the same as the first.—The Household.

Mayonnaise dressing. One teaspoonful mustard, one teaspoonful powdered sugar, one half teaspoonful salt, one-quarter saltspoonful cayenne, yolks of two raw eggs, one pint olive oil, two tablespoonfuls vinegar, two tablespoonfuls lemon juice. Mix the first four ingredients in a small bowl, add the eggs. Stir well with a small wooden spoon. Add the oil, a few drops at a time, stirring until it thickens. If by chance you add too much oil, do not attempt to stir it all in at once, but take it up gradually. When the dressing is thick, thin with a little of the lemon, then oil and lemon alternately, and lastly the vinegar. When ready to serve, add half a cup of whipped cream, if you like. Have the eggs, oil and bowl well chilled.—Mary J. Lincoln.

An excellent substitute for a hot water bag, specially when needed for the comfort of cold feet in bed, is a large bottle filled with as hot water as the glass will stand, closed with a rubber stopper. A quart bottle will keep warm all night and be a source of great comfort to one having little vitality, or poor circulation of the blood. Another convenience is to keep in the house bags made of stout cotton cloth, light weight duck or other tightly woven goods. It is a good plan to make these bags in assorted sizes. Fill them with clean sand. When needed for warming a bed or a sick person, put them in a moderate oven and let them get thoroughly heated. These sand bags will keep an even temperature for a long time. They can be adjusted to an aching back or side, used to pillow a neuralgic face or as a foot warmer.

...Books...

Now that the winter evenings are fast approaching, old and young need some good book that will instruct as well as amuse, to pass away the evenings. Below we give a partial list of books suitable for all:

A GREAT MOTHER. By FRANCES E. WILLARD and MRS. MINERVA B. NORTON. There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to this volume. It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession but not often do we find those who are willing, to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose. Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction; therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions. Bound in silver and gray. Price, $1.50.

CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE. By MARY ALLEN WEST. The childhood of to-day is the nation of to-morrow! There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual, spiritual. To this end Childhood, Its Care and Culture was written. In a letter to Miss West, Madam Willard wrote: "If I could have but one book beside the Bible to help me in bringing up children, I would by all means choose to have this. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Bound in cloth, marble edges, $3.00. Full morocco, gilt edges, $4.25.

CONFIDENTIAL TALKS WITH YOUNG WOMEN. By LYMAN B. SPERRY, M. D., Lecturer on Sanitary Science, Carleton College, Minn. Author of Concerning Narcotics, Confidential Talks with Young Men, etc., with introduction by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen. This helpful volume, treating an important subject from a Christian, medical point of view, should be carefully read, and its contents imparted to the daughters of to-day. 16mo. cloth, price, 75 cents.

BEFORE HE IS TWENTY. Five perplexing phases of the boy question considered. By ROBERT J. BURDETTE, FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, EDWARD W. BOK, MRS. BURTON HARRISON and MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT. With portraits of the authors. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. "The boy of the period is unquestionably interesting. He is more so than was his brother of a century ago. . . . It means much, particularly to parents who are charged with the responsibility of a training that must adjust itself, in a greater or less degree, to the time their boys are born, live and shall live. . . . It is for the purpose of presenting the wisest and best concentrated modern thought on the different phases of the boy of the period that the articles in this little book were conceived."—PREFACE. Price 75.

HYGIENE OF THE HOME. By SUSAN BURR BARNES. A valuable guide along the lines of home keeping. A good book for housekeepers and mothers. Cloth bound. Price 75 cents.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. The story of the life of Mary E. Willard—"My Sister Mary," as she is yet tenderly called by the author. A writer says, "It is the most entrancing of all histories. To the cultivated and appreciative reader of every age, sex and sect, there is spread out here a rare and rich feast from the enjoyment of which he must arise a purer, stronger and better nature." Price, paper, 10 cents. Handsomely bound in cloth, 75 cents.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES of White Ribbon women (official) contains brief biographies of the prominent W. C. T. U. workers of the world. Beautifully illustrated, containing forty half tone, cabinet size portraits. One hundred and twenty-five pages neatly bound in cloth and paper. Will interest all White Ribboners. Send for it. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 50 cents.

THE SCIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life," paper, board and illuminated cover. 12mo, 35c. "To be a mother is the grandest vocation in the world. No other human being has a position of such power and influence. She holds in her hands the destiny of nations, for to her is necessarily committed the making of the nations' citizens." This extract from the author's prefatory chapter but enunciates the principle of the little volume, and our readers are sufficiently familiar with the gifted author's former volumes to realize that in this new line of thought they will have a helpful treatise.

A GIFT OF LOVE. By ROSE PORTER. Love texts for 365 days. Long 18mo. Daintily bound, white cloth silver top, boxed. Price $1.00.

A GIFT OF PEACE. By ROSE PORTER. "Peace" texts for every day in the year, with quotations from choice authors in poetry and prose, aptly fitting the text for the day. Uniform with a "Gift of Love." Price $1.00.

BOYS AND OTHER BOYS. GIRLS OF TO-DAY. By LUCY A. SCOTT. Just the books to give needed advice and help to the boy or girl in the critical early teens. Not "goody-goody" but clear, strong, faithful, interesting. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK. A selection for each day from the best writers among women. Edited by ANNA A. GORDON. Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury. Handsomely bound. Price, $1.00.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION; or, The Common-Sense Teaching of the Bible. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." 12mo, cloth, $1. "In preparing these Lessons, I have aimed not so much to get at the doctrinal truths of our religion, as at the every-day, practical common-sense principles; and to show how to apply these principles to our week-day lives."—PREFACE.

LITTLE MISS PHŒBE GAY, by Helen Dawes Brown, is as sweet a story of child life as the season has sent out. Miss Phœbe Gay, the youngest of nine loving, rollicking, healthy, home-loving children, and rich in the possession of father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, gives in her own words chapters from her life, the life of a fun-loving, conscientious child. The most attractive chapter in the book is the visit little Miss Phœbe Gay and her grandmother paid to Louise Alcott, for the little girl was one of the thousands who have laughed and cried and cried and laughed again over "Little Women."

THE PARTNERS. By William O. Stoddard. A story for girls.

Mr. Stoddard says regarding his method of writing: "I cannot write a book at all until I have actually made the intimate personal acquaintance of the boys and girls who are to figure in it, so that they will grow confidential and tell me how they feel and what they mean to do." Nelly, who is described in the early pages of the story, by her aunt as "the unthinkingest girl," will be beloved by all girl and boy readers, while Billy and Sam, dog Cash, and Peter the bullhead, form as lively a group as can be found in story land.

He has forgotten his youth who does not remember the fascination there ever dwelt in stories that gave voice and speech to the dumb animals of forest and field, or the wonderful tales about children that wandered away to impossible countries and met impossible giants and dwarfs with magic rings and lanterns and wands. Parents who do remember the hours spent with these dear books will be glad to put into the hands of their own little ones the sweet, safe, story-volume, MR. RABBIT AT HOME, a sequel to Joel Chandler Harris' "Little Mr. Thimblefinger." Buster John, Sweetest Susan and Drusilla—the Tar Baby—take another expedition "next door to the world," where Mr. Rabbit, Mrs. Meadows and Mr. Thimblefinger entertain them with stories about Mr. Thunder, the Cow with the Golden Horns, the Magic Ring, the dreadful Woog and the kind Weeze, Chickamy Crany Crow and Tickle-My-Toes. THE LITERARY WORKS OF MARY T. LATHRAP, POEMS, ADDRESSES, ETC. Read the following from Miss Willard's pen, and secure for yourself this choice volume, which will be sent, postpaid, $1.70 cloth; $2.20, half morocco:

GERMANTOWN, PHILA., PA., October 28, 1895.

Julia R. Parish,

MY DEAR SISTER:—Not until I came here, to the home of our dear Miss Sallie Greene, did I see the beautiful book you had left for me—our beloved Mary T. Lathrap's life. It is a monument for which every white-ribboner should be glad and grateful, for it enshrines for us forever and a day an outline of that great life, and preserves those lovely poems and masterful orations, never excelled and almost never equaled by any woman in America.

Dr. Lathrap has shown his good sense in expending upon such an imperishable monument to his wife that which many men exchange for a mere shaft of stone, to be set in some cemetery, unvisited and unknown.

To all our speakers, writers and workers, this book, by its beauty and originality, will be of incalculable worth, while as a memorial of her, it is praise to say that the volume is worthy of a work so rare and a memorial so choice as hers. Nothing will be more helpful to the great cause for which Mary T. Lathrap expended her great life, than that this book should have the widest possible sale and reading throughout the ranks of the white-ribbon army.

Let me congratulate you, dear friend, on the wise and womanly way in which you have carried out the high and delicate task confided to you. I feel sure that Mary would say it is just as I could wish.

Believe me, dear sister,

Yours in joyful service,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

We have heard of a music book called "Sunshine Song Book," and we think that would be not an inappropriate title for "Marching Songs, No. 3." The spirited music will make sunshine as you sing it, and you will rejoice in the work of love which has led Miss Gordon to compile this almost perfect song book. Send 15 cents, and see if our opinion is correct.

Some of the evils of drink are thrown into the story. Published also in paper for 25 cents.

Signal Notes

Sunday closing of saloons in Scotland has obtained for forty years.

There have been 3,548 arrests for drunkenness in Cork during the past year.

London has six millions of population, but church accommodation exists for only two millions.

The public houses of Cork, Ireland, if placed in line allowing twenty-five feet frontage to each, would extend two and three-fifths miles.

It is estimated that 4,600,000 barrels of beer are consumed annually in New York city, two and a half barrels for each man, woman and child.

The elder brother of the witty Canon Wilberforce, also a strong supporter of temperance reform, Dr. Ernest Roland Wilberforce, has been made Bishop of Chichester.

The Methodist Episcopal church in the United States has two hundred higher institutions of learning, with property valued at more than twenty-six million dollars, and forty-three thousand students.

The police commissioners of Newark, N. J., have memorialized themselves by sending a note to the local Christian Citizenship Union refusing to enforce the laws against liquor-selling on Sunday.

Voluntary contributions in Great Britain for missionary purposes last year, according to Canon Scott Robertson's annual summary, amounted to £1,375,571—a sum which has only once before been exceeded.

The Journal of Commerce, a New York city daily, was founded many years ago by Arthur Tappan, the philanthropist, under the conditions that it publish no advertisements of theatres, etc., and have no issue on the Sabbath.

Side by side with Father Mathew, Ireland boasts of Mrs. Carlisle, who in the declining years of her life induced 70,000 men and women to abandon the drink, so impressed was she with the havoc it wrought, while engaged in prison mission work in Dublin.

That was an appropriate testimonial to the devoted Dr. Barnardo at the close of thirty years' rescue work among British waifs. Three thousand pounds were presented, the united gift of one thousand one hundred persons, accompanied by an illuminated address.

Switzerland has the unenviable record of the greatest number of suicides in proportion to population of any country. Small wonder that the National Medical College has appealed to the press not to publish accounts of these crimes for the encouragement of others.

A practical experiment made by the clergymen of Worcester, Mass., has proven conclusively that for $100,000 received from one hundred additional licenses, the city actually lost in trade, in increased charities and other expenses caused by poverty and crime, two million dollars.

Four noble piles of architecture have been erected by women of Chicago within the past five years—four conspicuous monuments of women's work. The Woman's Temperance Temple, the Fowler Hall of McCormick Seminary, the Jones Memorial Building of the Presbyterian Hospital, and the Young Women's Christian Association building.

An inquiry into the nationality of persons engaged in retailing liquor in Philadelphia has resulted in the following statement: Chinamen, 2; Jews, 2; Italians, 18; Spaniards, 140; negroes, 265; Welsh, 160; French, 185; Scotch, 497; English, 598; Germans, 2,851; Irish, 3,041; Americans, 205. Total, 8,034. Of this number 7,638 are Roman Catholics; 3,696 are women, all foreigners but one, and all Roman Catholics.

Under the Norwegian system it will be remembered that every resident in a locality, whether man or woman, above twenty-five years of age, has a right to vote on the question of establishing or continuing a samlag or dispensary for the sale of spirits in the town or borough. There are thirteen samlags whose concessions expire this year. In two of these—Gjovik and Arendal—the vote has created considerable excitement. But in both places the women's vote has closed the saloons. It is generally anticipated that the same result will transpire in the other places. All honor to the gallant women of Norway!

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Street railway strikers have been rioting in Philadelphia.

The American and British commissioners have agreed upon the Alaskan boundary.

The management of the Wisconsin State University is under investigation, charges having been preferred.

Great enthusiasm is shown at Caracas over President Cleveland's message to Congress on the Venezuelan question.

Minister Terrell advises all Americans, especially women and children, to leave Turkey unless the massacres are stopped by the Christian powers, for which he sees little hope.

"Commercial Day" was inaugurated in the United States by the centennial celebration of the Jay commercial treaty with Great Britain, at Delmonico's, New York. Hon. Chauncey Depew presided.

Senator Hall has introduced a bill for the increase of the United States Navy by twenty-five torpedo boats at a cost of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars each, and six battle ships at four million dollars apiece.

Before adjourning last week the American Federation of Labor passed a resolution declaring that party politics, whether Democratic, Republican, Socialistic, Populistic or any other, should not have any place in the Federation of Labor.

MISS WILLARD has been invited, through Dr. W. Evans Darby, the well-known peace advocate, to become a member of the general council of the Society for the Recognition of the Brotherhood of Man, and has accepted. The headquarters of this society are in London.

THE Minutes of the twenty-second annual meeting of the National W. C. T. U. will be ready to send out soon after the holidays, price fifteen cents per copy. Miss Willard's address will hereafter be sent for the same price. Why not order the address by the quantity and give to pastors, teachers and other friends? Nothing for that price would do so much to awaken thought and conscience. Send orders to Helen M. Barker, The Temple.

MISS WILLARD organized a union in Louisville, named in honor of the famous evangelist, the Mills W. C. T. U. Its special effort will be the rescue of what are called the "forgotten women," and it proposes to carry on the work by means of a Settlement of good women who shall live in the neighborhood of those whom they are trying to help. The work of the society will be twofold, preventive and rescue, and to advance the first it is intended to arrange a systematic plan of mothers' meetings whereby the young shall be forewarned and forearmed against the great temptations that await them on the threshold of adult life. Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, of Evanston, Ill., who is at the head of the department of mothers' meetings in the Illinois W. C. T. U., will be invited to hold such meetings at an early day in Louisville.

AT ten o'clock on the morning of December 18, a goodly number of stockholders and others having proxies met in Willard Hall for the adjourned annual meeting of the stockholders of the W. T. P. A. The reports of the president and business manager were read and accepted. A majority of the stock was represented and after some general and miscellaneous business the following directors were elected for the present year: Mrs. Carse, Miss Willard and Mesdames Plumb, Ingalls, Demorest, Tyng, Dunham, Bailey, Christiansen, Graham and Barker. The reports show that our publishing house is in a healthy condition and much thankfulness was expressed that while many larger establishments have been driven to the wall by the stringency of the times, ours has been able to weather the storm and maintain its credit unimpaired.

DR. FUNK, of the Voice, has been widely quoted as saying that "beer-drinking as the Germans drink it—is not hurtful." Complying with the request of THE UNION SIGNAL, Dr. Funk sends us the "truth of the matter," which, as we were of the opinion it would, reveals the fact that he has been grossly misrepresented. Replying to a correspondent of the New York Sun, he wrote an article for that paper in which the following language occurs: "the fact that Germans drink beer and yet are strong he thinks a conclusive sort of ad hominem argument that beer-drinking, as the Germans drink it, is not hurtful." Now the "he" who advocates the use of beer is the Sun correspondent whose proposition Dr. Funk is refuting. To so twist this little personal pronoun as to make it apply to the latter is clearly a trick of the enemy. For the very next words of the article in question are, "Is this true?" and Dr. Funk goes on to prove from "cold business facts" furnished by life insurance companies that "malt liquor taken habitually by the moderate drinker tends to increase mortality" and that "the rate of mortality is greater among the Germans than among our native American population." It is to be hoped that this explanation of Dr. Funk's position on the beer question will get at least as much publicity as the misleading statement which has been going the rounds of the newspapers concerning that "true blue" prohibition champion.

IN view of the sentence of death but recently passed upon certain noted murderers, and the peculiarly revolting character of their crimes, the resolution passed by the American Federation of Labor declaring against capital punishment is significant. It is a growing question among thinking people whether the effect of executions upon the public mind is salutary or malign—whether such method of "protecting society" does not defeat its own ends.

"How to unite" is the problem with which many a reformer, impelled by the resistless logic of events, is wrestling to-day, and many a brain is busy evolving schemes to this end. It is history repeating itself and a "basis of union" will as surely be found to meet the present crisis as it has in past emergencies. In giving space to the communication, "A Scheme to unite Reformers," in last week's issue, or to any suggestions of like nature which may follow, we do so not necessarily because we regard such as practicable, but because it will help us all to keep up a "mighty big thinking."

THE Venezuelan question has for the time being thrown every other public question into the shade, and President Cleveland has by a bold, unexpected stroke made himself the hero of the hour in newspaperdom. Upon receipt of the special message the House lost no time in voting an appropriation of one hundred thousand dollars for the commission recommended by the President to survey the disputed territory, the Senate, after proper deliberation, concurring. It is a striking instance showing how the American people can, when necessary, throw aside all partisan differences and unite for what they believe to be the best interests of the whole. The situation is a prolific one for the newspaper paragrapher and cartoonist. But all the bluster and pugilistic attitudes of John Bull and Brother Jonathan—all the screaming of the eagle and the roaring of the lion—are merely surface indications of a war on paper. Underneath this there is a consciousness on both sides the water that the interests of England and America are too closely allied to permit any serious "unpleasantness" between them. These two Christian nations, while they may interpret differently the points of the Monroe doctrine, can have no hesitancy in coming to an amicable agreement upon the basis of gospel doctrine.

AT the convention of the American Federation of Labor, which recently met in Madison Square Theater, New York, a young man delegate arose as soon as the meeting was called to order and moved that inasmuch as some of the delegates were ladies representing the W. C. T. U., smoking should be discontinued during the time of their stay. This courteous and considerate motion was unanimously carried. Mrs. Burt in her excellent address came out strong for the white ribbon principles of total abstinence and prohibition, of an equal standard of morality for men and women, and equal wages for equal work for women. The two last were heartily applauded while there was a noticeable lack of enthusiasm in the reception of the first. In the days of Terrence V. Powderly, total abstinence was popular, but we learn to our sorrow that the recent presidents of the Labor Associations are not teetotalers and we grieve to hear that this is true of the man who has just been elected to the position. The wage-workers of this country will never realize their hopes until they carry level heads on their shoulders. White-ribbon women earnestly sympathize with the wage-workers in their efforts to rise, but it makes our hearts ache to realize the degree of control that alcoholic drinks and tobacco have over their leaders and all through the "rank and file." It tends to discourage our cherished hopes for a union of reform forces. But in this as in all other efforts to advance the cause of humanity, we must "learn to labor and to wait."

WHY?

BY SARAH KNOWLES BOLTON.

Why did you come into my life, dear friend?
I cannot tell;
There is no accident beneath the sun;
He doeth well

To all His creatures. But I dread the pain
And break of heart!
Ah! foolish one, with every loss is gain.
This is a part

Of the great drama you must act below.
The end shall be Worthy its author. Wherefore? You shall know
In far eternity.

JOHN SHELTON, LONGSHOREMAN.

BY LOUISE ALSON.

Hot words were passing between John Shelton, boarder, and Simon Arnold, proprietor.

"Your month's board is due, and if you don't pay soon you'll have to go," said the landlord, ungraciously.

"Don't you fear. I'm no cheat. You'll have your pay, and don't you forget it," answered John Shelton, slamming out of the door. He was filled with anger and chagrin, for he had not one dollar to his name, nor had he any work.

"Curse the drink!" said he under his breath. "I'll get a job somewhere. I drink whiskey, but I pay debts." Down to the docks he strode. He could find work there. He had roughed it more than once, he could again. He had stout muscles and a stout heart.

John Shelton had pulled himself together this morning resolved to once again retrieve defeat. He'd try to do the manly thing at all events. Long ago he had severed himself from friends, resolved to fight out his disgrace alone. He had fought to lose, always. But, so far, he had always rallied, clinched some small show of courage to his lonely heart and said, "I'll fight it anyway." Three months, six months, yes, even ten months, drink would not touch his lips. Then the mad thirst would sweep him into the horrors of fierce drinking from which he would emerge, sick at heart, empty of purse, and often, as at this time, discharged from his position.

He never eased up retribution for himself. When the wild craving ceased he locked himself into his room, enduring for a day or more his tortured nerves and conscience. Prone on his bed, with hands hard clenched, he would wonder why he drank; would wonder, with a shudder, what acts or words while drunk had stripped him of his manliness; why he, a drunkard, should have longings for a clean, abstemious life; would wonder, in a heartsick way, if those who once had prayed and hoped for his redemption had ceased to pray and hope; would wonder, in that hell of anguished thoughts that drunkards—who are so because they cannot help but be—pass through, if faith in his inherent manliness were ended in this world for him; and if his sainted mother, knowing his whole life would, if she could come back, touch gently his hot head and speak yet kindly to her erring boy.

This was the man, who, angrily, was striding to the docks; who gladly would take any honest work; who had a brain well trained and bright, but who had lost his rightful place because of drink.

A boat, laden with flour, lay at the docks. John Shelton saw in it his chance. In ten minutes' time he was enrolled a longshoreman. He gave a bitter little laugh at his good luck, tossed off his coat and went to work. His muscle, trained in college days, was excellent. The rough longshoremen recognized in him an unfamiliar type of comrade, and summed up their impressions in one short phrase, "Down in luck." And, for a better name, as introductions were amenities of life unknown in their profession, they addressed him as "Whiskers." A friendliness, despite their different training, sprang up between them. John Shelton minded his own business, and took hard work without a sign of shirking. Those brawny-armed longshoremen saw the heavy lifting taxed him often, and soon they took to giving him, when work was heavy, a friendly lift; or saying gruffly, to conceal their kindliness, "Go 'long, Whiskers, I'll do this job for you." Their kindness helped his wretchedness, yet, some days, his bitterness was great. His stiffened hands and aching back were outward symbols of his brain and heart. Save that he paid his debts and kept from drink he saw no good in this rough life.

But one day, when a man got hurt, and all the fellows put together out of their small pay and made a purse for him, John Shelton saw these rough companions in a new and better light. He worked with men—men who could share unselfishly. He felt, when he had given his small part, a respite from his bitterness.

Another day, Longshoreman Sam was absent from his work. Big Bill, the roughest-spoken, burliest fellow of them all, said: "Sam's little kid is dead. She died last night. Sam's all broke up." And then proposed, clearing his throat in evident embarrassment, "to get some posies for the kid, an' Whiskers, there, could write some words an' send with 'em. Might ease up Sam a bit."

John Shelton wondered that his heart and pencil framed such sincere words of sorrow; he wondered that it grieved him so to know one little girl was dead, and Sam was "all broke up." And then he recognized these men were teaching him his almost lost belief in sympathy.

Another day, out on the docks, he saw a dog half famished. Long since he had learned to take his dinner in a pail as others did. He gave the half to the poor brute, and felt repaid when it looked up with grateful eyes and licked his hand in thanks. He laughed to think he could make any living thing so glad.

One day the heat beat down intolerably. Work was heavy. John Shelton staggered more than once. Worst of all, the mad desire for drink was on him. A load of lumber, with its woody odors, recalled his boyhood rambles in the cool, dark groves at home. He felt each plank grow heavier. He longed for rest, for night, for just one drink of whisky. He could not see to grasp the next plank; he tried again, then stumbled, fell.

The longshoremen picked him up and put him in the shade.

"He's the stuff!" said Burly Bill. "He's took the heaviest when it come his way. He's ready for the horspital, you bet."

"Get out about the horspital," said Sam. "My woman can take care of him a heap sight better than a horspital."

It would be happiness to help the man whose words in that short note sent with the roses when their little girl lay dead, had broken into words and tears his own and Mary's desolation.

Hours later John Shelton, dazed and weak, said, seeing Sam beside his bed, "Why, Sam, how's this?"

"Knocked out a little, Whiskers," responded Sam, "but Mary, there, will bring you round first-class. The fellows sent their best respects, 'an' you're the stuff,' an' said to tell you that they'd do your work 'til you got round again."

John Shelton felt a new sensation. This sharing his "down luck" was warming his chilled heart. There came a day when Shelton walked down to the docks. His "luck was up." A friend of former times had noticed in the daily happenings this: "John Shelton, while unloading lumber at the docks, was overcome by heat and taken to 72 Chestnut St., where he lies in a critical condition." So this old friend went to him, trusted him, and with a friendly grip and voice, proposed, when he got well, some good and paying work. "I'll help you in the fight, John," said the friend, and both were blessed.

So "luck was up"—to use the words of Burly Bill. John Shelton pondered as he went down to the docks to say good-by to the longshoremen, upon the power of cheer these men possessed. He felt more touched at parting than he would confess. He said at last, as if he'd solved the matter to his satisfaction,

"Not what we give, but what we share;
For the gift, without the giver, is bare."

John Shelton grasped the horny hands of Bill and Sam and all the rest and said: "You've lifted many a heavy end for me. If luck gets down give me a chance to lift for you."

Then those longshoremen, stout of heart and voice said, "You're the stuff. Good luck to you. Hurrah for Whiskers!"

So ended the career, which was not wholly down in luck, of John Shelton, longshoreman.

THE GLORY OF GOD.

[Following is part of the annual sermon delivered before the Baltimore Convention by Katharine Lente Stevenson.]

The glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.—II. Cor. 4:6. The riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints.—Eph. 1:18.

I have ventured, at the outset, to violate one of the most rigid of sermonic rules, and to base my thought upon two detached sentences, widely separated from each other. Under ordinary circumstances, I should deprecate such handling of the Word of God, but there are times when, under the illuminating power of the Spirit, a new light is flashed upon an isolated passage, and its relation to another apparently dissimilar sentence is clearly seen. When this light comes, we can never again hesitate to unite in form what is so clearly united in spirit. We see as never before that there are no detached passages, that each divine truth has an affinity with all other truth, and we dare not separate what God has thus manifestly joined together.

No Scriptural phrase is more familiar to us all than the one found in both texts—"The glory of God." It is interwoven with all our hymnology; it forms part of the most majestic of ritualistic services, and one of the deepest and most frequent breathings of the Puritans in their stern devotions was that the glory of God might be revealed to and through them. We shout "glory" at our prayer-meetings; we learn at our mother's knee to say, "Thine is the glory"; we see the word constantly flashed back to us from the page of the Divine book, and yet I doubt if any other phrase has quite so vague a meaning to the majority of those who use it.

Let us see for a moment what the word literally means, for there is no other method quite so effective, in dealing with a vague idea, as to corner it with a dictionary definition. We find that there are three distinct meanings given to the word in our lexicons. First, the according of praise to an individual or thing; second, the qualities or attributes, which make that individual or thing worthy of praise; third, the outward manifestation of a splendor corresponding to the inward attribute. As we look at the word, in the Old Testament, especially, we see that all three meanings are used interchangeably.

And yet even in the Old Testament, we have hints of a deeper meaning, a more profound conception of glory. When Moses stood upon the mount before God, his prayer was:—"I beseech Thee show me Thy glory." When we remember that only a short time before he had stood on that same mount, with the twelve elders, and had there seen that dazzling manifestation of the presence of the Infinite which is described in the words: "And they saw the God of Israel, and there was under his feet, as it were, a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were, the body of heaven in his clearness," we certainly must infer that he had a deeper conception of God's glory than to count it a thing expressed by even so marvellous a vision. It was as if he had said:—"I have seen all this outer covering, but now I beseech Thee show me Thy glory." And God answered that prayer, and his answer was this: "I will make all my goodness to pass before thee." And when Moses had been hidden "in the cleft of the rock"—buttressing his weakness of a day with the strength of eternal ages,—then "the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty!" This was the revelation Moses had sought—the declaration of God's character, the revelation of Himself. He had seen that of which the apostle also had caught the vision, when he speaks of "the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

Not transport, not ecstasy, not praise, not a dazzling manifestation of pomp and splendor, but the "face of Jesus Christ" alone can reveal the glory of God.

I do not know just what that passage may mean to each one of you. Will you think it savors of arrogance if I say that I have been careful not to ascertain what it means to the commentators? Not that I would by any means undervalue the opinions of those who have made a life study of the Word, but because there are certain passages which have come to me with so clearly an individual meaning, so manifestly I believe under the inspiration of the Spirit, that I dare not dim their light in my own soul by seeking to know any other possible interpretations. To me it means exactly what it says, that the character of God, which is His only "glory," is revealed in the character of Jesus Christ. I am caring less and less, as the years go on, for the doctrinal setting of this thought. I am caring more and more for the vital truth which must be the life of the doctrine. Briefly stated, my conception is this—the world's one need is to know God, to know Him not as men have thought Him to be, but as He is, His character, His essential self. From whatever avenue you approach the thought, whether you hold the doctrine of a primary revelation lost through sin, or whether you hold to the principle of evolution, and believe that man must be brought by the development of the ages to a standpoint where God can be revealed to him, the central truth is still the same—that poor bewildered humanity was at an inexpressible distance from any adequate conception of God.

Mankind was everywhere restless, everywhere reaching out for and demanding something which could satisfy. Then, in the fullness of time, Christ came; the interpreter of the Divine purpose from the beginning, the acme of the race's possible evolution, the promise of all that is to come was born into this world! The reason of His coming may be expressed in two propositions. First, he came to show to man the Father, to reveal God.

The vital question is: "What did this revelation show

God to be? In what consists His glory as shown forth in Jesus Christ?" It is not easy to put this into a definition. Eighteen centuries have been studying the life work of Jesus Christ and the principles underlying that work, and still the problem is not solved. He has been viewed from every possible angle of vision, and like the facets of the diamond new light has shown forth with every view. One has seen His justice only, and has made Him a stern denouncer of sin. Another has seen His pity, His tears before Jerusalem, and has made that pity overshadow every other quality. Another has felt the glad heart-beat of joy with which the Christ went about His Father's business, and has made joy and gladness the central thought of the divine revelation. One has seen in Him only the redeemer of the individual sinner from his personal sin; another has seen Him as a destroyer of sin in the body politic, and has made His second coming as King the manifestation of glory which shall relentlessly sweep away all evil. A deeper vision beholds in Him the most profound self-abnegation and self-surrender, and yet even this thought needs guarding, since there is a self-abnegation which overlooks entirely the necessity of the highest self-development, that thus the self-surrender may be of truest value.

It all goes with this—the old crude words by which we are forced even now to strive to express the meanings which lie too deep for words. Satisfaction? It is that, a satisfaction which infinitely satisfies both God and man. Substitution? It is that, the eternal substitution of the innocent for the guilty, through that divine process by means of which the guilty one shall come, in time, to count his life part of the sacrifice. Redemption? It is that, with a fullness of meaning which falls nothing short of the redemption of the whole nature. Regeneration? It is that, to be born anew into a life of possibilities far surpassing the old life. Sanctification? It is that, the purifying of every faculty, the ennobling of every influence, the thrilling and filling of each pulse with the very life of God. Atonement? It is that, the perpetual perfect atonement between God and man which comes to each man who has caught the vision of God's thought toward himself, and toward the whole human race.

These are all parts in the great whole, but the law coupling the whole is the fact of facts, the truth of truths, the inspiration of inspirations, that "the glory of God is revealed in the face of Jesus Christ."

Now briefly for the second text. It is here that the second proposition concerning Christ's mission comes in. He came not only to show God, but He came to show man himself, his own possibilities in God, his own capacity for revealing God. Side by side with the revelation of the Father must stand forth the revelation of man, the son, the child of God.

Just think for a moment of the scope of that passage! What is it that Paul wants us to know? "The riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints." The human intellect might strive ages before it could compass even a fractional part of this which Paul so calmly sets before us as the true ideal of knowledge.

I believe the greatest discovery the church of this age has made is that we are called to a like mission with the Master; that as He revealed God, so are we to reveal Him, not only in the thoughts we think of Him in the quiet of our devotional hours, not only in the words we say of Him in our testimony and before the world, but in the deeds we do and the words which are perpetually falling from our lips as we meet men, everywhere, in our manifold human relations.

It is the glory of the religious concept of this age that it no longer builds a dividing line between sacred and secular; that this line is obliterated not by bringing the sacred down to the level of the secular, but by lifting the secular up to the height of the sacred; so that we may feel that the man who toils with brawn and sinew is as much revealing the divine life as the one who stands behind the pulpit, or the one who puts imperishable thoughts upon the canvas or upon paper. We are coming to see that the glory of God may be revealed in righteous laws righteously executed, as well as in anthems gloriously sung; in proper sanitary conditions for the body politic, as well as in orthodox doctrines for the suppression of error; in Christian sociology, as well as in theology, which is Christian sometimes only in name; in whatever tends to the inbringing of righteousness.

The glory of God as revealed in Christ Jesus means the perfect freedom to each individual to live out his or her highest life, under the best possible conditions, and, in order that this may be possible, it must, of necessity, mean the sweeping away of much that, intrenched behind law and custom, is hindering the living out of our highest lives.

It is just here that reform work comes to its place in the church of Christ to-day, because we are confronted on every hand with evils which prevent the human life from truly revealing the divine life, and those evils must be removed as so much impedimenta before the church can sweep on conquering and to conquer.

There can be but one attitude of the Christian toward evil, that of absolute, uncompromising, relentless opposition, which shall take in the whole man, and which shall everywhere "lend a hand" in the struggle for God and righteousness. It is just here that I believe the Woman's Christian Temperance Union comes to its place as an integral part of the church of Christ. Our eyes have been anointed to see the world's wrongs and our ears have heard the Divine voice calling us to right those wrongs, to loose the prisoners and to bid the oppressed go free. To us God has clearly shown His purpose for this age, and His call to us is to show to the world the sweet reasonableness of that purpose, as well as its binding stress upon us, the followers of Christ.

Accept Christ? Yes, but it must be the daily, hourly acceptance of His cross as well as His name. Follow Christ? Yes, but it must be into Gethsemane's garden, as well as upon the mount of transfiguration. Be baptized in His name? Yes, so it means for us a baptism into that heart of love and yearning anguish, which spared not Himself for the love He bore to others. Accept His death as our sacrifice for sin? Yes, but to the very measure of that acceptance we must count our lives also a part of that sacrifice laid down for others, as His was laid down for all.

So only can "the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" come to its fullest unfoldment when we really know, by actual, vital experience, "what are the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints."

THE SOCIAL GETHSEMANE.

BY LAURA ORMISTON CHANT.

The streets of London are in one particular a deep disgrace to a city in a civilized, let alone a Christian land. They are a perpetual menace to the home life of the people, and a ribald burlesque of our national ideals. This disgrace consists in the presence of large numbers of women who are there for but one purpose, the sale of themselves to whoever will buy, and of men, some of whom farm the sale to other men, keeping often the greater part, sometimes the whole of the price themselves; of men who are there to buy, and of men who neither buy nor farm from the streets, but who find their enjoyment in watching those who do. Now and again some victim for sale begins her miserable career independently, going straight to the pavement as a commencement. But in the majority of cases she sinks down to the streets from some more advantageous position.

As an example of this, take the case of "Pearl," who was once the gayest, youngest and most attractive of the bedecked and painted crowd that nightly thronged the promenades of the Alhambra and the Empire. After two or three months of being the transient darling of bad men, and leading a "gay" life, she succumbed to the effects of much drink, late hours, excitement and fatigue, and became very thin, pale and hysterical. One night when she saw a man whom she had secured for herself change his mind and go off with another, newer girl, she went into such a fury of passion right there in the promenade that she was turned out. Alas, there was no tender-hearted, motherly "prude on the prowl" there that night to hear the cry of anguish both of body and mind that rang up the gorgeous staircase as Pearl was roughly hustled out and bundled into a four-wheeler by her "friends" and a policeman, or her subsequent pitiful sufferings and present hopelessness might have been averted.

At present Pearl sells matches, and "picks up" what she can. She is often drunk. She says she is seldom out of pain, and that standing in the wet gutter and pavement, and for hours being as cold and hungry as it is possible to be, makes it a "jolly sight better to get tight now and then" than "to keep sober and think what's before you." Once a chance was given her of two whole months of good food at regular hours, nice, soft warm clothing, light employment, and kindest treatment; but Pearl had lost those qualities that appreciate these things, and missed her drink so dreadfully that in spite of her gratitude she ran off early one morning in her hostess' stockings and boots, leaving her bed-clothes in a heap on the floor, and a piece of paper pinned to them on which was written the gratuitous announcement, "I shan't want them no more."

Pearl's father was an unknown quantity in her life. Her mother had been an unfaithful wife, and had early in Pearl's career set her an example of how to go to ruin. But the girl's heart took a great deal of spoiling; and it was not an easy matter for her to make a business of securing customers. Part of the tragedy of our streets is that it takes so much lying, cheating, treachery, and cruelty to send the majority of the female sinners on to them; and Pearl's mother had not failed to use all of these before her daughter at fifteen had been coerced into receiving men under her own mother's roof. It was not so difficult soon after to get her to put on a pink silk frock, and have her cheeks rouged, to go to a place of amusement and be introduced to new men, and get them to go home with her.

Meanwhile Pearl's mother keeps a lodging-house and calls her lodgers "actresses;" and Pearl's father is on his way to the day of reckoning which God has in store for him. And Pearl's drunken shouts and foul language reach somewhere where prayers go and are answered; but London goes on bidding "Pearl" increase and multiply and often puts into important civic and municipal positions men who have made her what she is.

That is why our streets are such a disgrace to us; that is why we have Gethsemane at our doors instead of heaven. "Why don't you clear the streets?" is the cry of the profligate whenever the decent-living part of the community endeavors to change the existing order of things, and get morally clean men into office instead of foul ones. The answer is, "We will do so as soon as we have men and women in power who will do it in the right way and not in the wrong." Vice is the refuse of all that is good and lovely in the human character, and all our efforts ought to be in the direction of getting rid of it from the life of the individual, and in this way from the streets. It is a shame and a horror to see its ostentatious hideousness flaunted in our midst, an offence to common decency and kindness; but it is the insanity of despair to ask for it to be heaped up in houses and places of amusement, to spread its deadly contagion with secret but certain malevolence.

Some people point to rescue work as the best way of dealing with the evil of the streets; but excellent as the curative work may be, it is to the preventive we must look for enduring results. No, the clearing of the streets can only be accomplished by stopping the sources of supply; and let the latter be what they may it is the duty of every good citizen, whether man or woman, to know and put an end to them. Unfair wages, overtasked strength, inadequate preparation for the duties of life, unhappy home life, betrayed love, amusements that corrupt, the many snares set for inexperience by cunning hands, and a low estimate of women on the part of men—these are some of the sources from which the dark stream of human ruin on the streets is supplied, and it is to the Christly work of abolishing them that some men and women have consecrated their lives.

Let the gay ones, the greedy ones, and the careless laugh or sneer as they will. Let them mouth out their stale platitudes and dreary pessimisms on the necessity and endurability of vice and prostitution, while the twilight of earth and decay gathers round them. We who believe in the eternal goodness have caught the gleam of the morning from the Sun of Righteousness on our work; and we know that behind all the disappointments and the hope deferred "God is standing in the shadow keeping watch above His own," and that the love that overcame negro slavery shall overcome the white slavery of the United States and of England.

Not forever shall men exploit the companionship of woman to her ruin and theirs. Not forever shall the baby, disowned of its father, lift its feeble cry to an unheeding nation. Not forever shall the street echo the weary footstep of the night-walker, and the drink traffic grow rich on the poverty of her kind.

And to all who took their stand on the side of right in the crusade against the Empire, whether it were the county councilors, or those who conducted the crusade, or the great army of those who sympathized and helped, let there come a word of hope and encouragement, for they have hastened the coming of a purer, sweeter, happier London, and in some way helped to answer the prayer for "the kingdom" to come.

A SON OF PEACE.

A Sketch.

BY ALICE B. PALMER.

When "Temple Items" gave an account of the gift of Mrs. James, of Harrismith, Orange Free State, South Africa, that her late husband's name might be inscribed upon the wall of our House Beautiful, and having received a letter from our generous, faithful sister James shortly before, I was set reflecting upon the holy life and great work done by this man for Christ's sake.

It was my privilege to sojourn twice in the home of Mr. and Mrs. James, the first time early in the year of 1893. I found the most perfect arrangements had been made by the W. C. T. U. of Harrismith, not only for the reception and comfort of the speaker, but the people had been so approached and informed that she might reach her highest state of usefulness in reference to them.

I learned on my visit to the Good Templars in their hall that it was owing to the enterprise and benevolence of Mr. James that they were in such comfortable and commodious headquarters. I went into the pretty parlor of the W. C. T. U. and found that rent and furnishing were the gifts of Mr. James. I attended the Wesleyan Church and heard how he had been for years an Aaron upholding the hands of his pastor. The Band of Hope regarded him as a father, the Sunday-school as a wise and kindly elder brother. Many a discouraged business man has gone from his presence with hope renewed, and many a discouraged Christian, with "a new song" in his heart and on his lips.

Again the following year I came to this haven of rest from the long and laborious journey of organizing in the Free State from west to east. Sweet violets are found at all seasons of the year along the borders in Mrs. James' rose garden, and one afternoon when the winter's sun shone genially I sought the reflection of his heat from the surrounding stone wall. Hidden by an angle of the conservatory, I could see the front of the house and hear voices in the street below, myself unseen. While I worked on my budget of letters for the homeward bound mail, those two saints emerged from their doorway, with smiles on their faces. My sixth sense, "a sense of the eternal fitness of things," told me they were bent on an errand of love. I afterward knew it was only to purchase a warm jacket for a young woman, an officer of the Salvation Army who sang hymns upon the streets at night. But that "only" was the atmosphere surrounding those two lives, recognized by a working man passing with a companion at that moment, and thus voiced: "Do you know that man? That's Tom James, that is; best man in Harrismith, most useful citizen in these parts, that is."

And I would rather have those plain, uncultured words concerning one who made all lives he touched happier and better, graven in my grateful memory than to behold the most finished monument that art has erected for earth's greatest warrior.

Within the weeks that I lay in pain and danger in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Garland in Verulam, Natal, the soul of Thomas James rose in triumph to his eternal home. One evening, when I was able to lie upon the sofa in the cozy sitting-room of these kind friends, we talked about the translation from Harrismith, and Thomas Garland, himself one of the best and sweetest of "the sons of peace," said in his gentle way, "He was a man of great power in prayer."

And then he told us how, walking one day beside his older friend, he had seen him stop, lift his hat, and closing his eyes move his lips in prayer. Looking about for a cause for this proceeding Mr. Garland saw a young man about to enter a hotel bar-room. He lifted the latch, gazed about him a moment, but seeing the two gentlemen standing in reverential attitude, turned from the door of death and passed on. I think Mr. Garland told us it was some years after that he heard this man give his testimony. "Mr. James told me he was going to pray for me till I quit drinking. When I saw him stop and pray right on the street I couldn't go in and get a drink that day. Somehow I never could get rid of that prayer. I gave up the drink about that time."

"A man's love to God is shown in the way in which he treats a servant or even speaks to a dog." This characteristic remark was made by Andrew Murray, that gifted apostle of Christ to Wellington and the world, and is an accurate description of the fullness of the love of Thomas James. The very cats and birds followed him for their meat, and his little brown dog was the happiest dog in all the country round, because his master was so beautiful and good.

"God took him" in July, 1894. But since the gift of God is life eternal, he who has gone on past the shadows still teaches those who are behind the lessons of our "Great Ensample."

WILLARD HALL FRAGMENTS.

Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.—John 6:12.

No camera could represent the scenes, no artist outline the transformations that occur at Willard Hall, no ear catch the heart-throbs, save God only. I wish I might give to you more than a poor pen picture of the man who told me the following facts in such graphic words that I said, "Go on, sir, go on, you strengthen my faith, you build me up for fresh effort."

"I had been a saloon-keeper," he said, "here in this sin-cursed city for twenty-two years when one day, not long since, by accident I wandered into Willard Hall. One of your lady workers spied me, and sitting down by my side told me the story of her Christ. I listened as she went on, my hungry heart seemed fed, and somehow I couldn't stand it. I went out of this building a changed man. About three days after I sold my saloon and all its trappings, and wife and I took a house to board a club of men. They urged the whisky question. I said firmly, 'No,' and they turned us away, so here we are. You ask me if I think I am a saved man. Think it! I don't think anything about it, I know it. Can't you tell your feet are resting on this solid floor? Just so we know it when we are rescued and standing on a Rock. I know I'm saved."

. . . . . .

A young man sitting in the last seat near the door was induced, after some persuasion, to remain to the after meeting. When he reached the altar he said, "I'm a Jew. I am thinking deeply over these matters, but I can't bow the knee to your Christ." Some minutes passed in prayer before the stubborn joints were bent, and still the battle raged in his soul. About forty Christians took hold on the horns of the altar, and before he left the room his lips had spoken reverently the name of Jesus.

. . . . . .

When an opportunity was given in the meeting one day for requests for prayer, a young man hurriedly arose as if to summon all his courage, and said: "For days I have longed to tell you that I needed your help and wanted a Saviour, but try as I would, I could not open my lips. Do pray for me." In the after meeting he came into the fold and appropriated the bountiful supply provided by grace divine.

. . . . . .

Requests for prayer are coming in upon us from all over the world. Ffteen minutes is devoted each day to this part of the service. A weary mother brought her lunch to eat in a retired spot in the Temple, saying, "You know I could not come unless I did this. I am working to support my two little ones and the strength I get in this room carries me through."

. . . . . .

A young man formerly an active worker in the vineyard came reeling into the corridor leading into Willard Hall. He extended his hand with these words, "You don't know me. I'm nearly dead and liquor did it, liquor did it." He was taken by one of the workers to an institution for help. The long eternity alone will reveal the good done in this room. Can we do too much to help it on?

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Practical Suggestions.

MY BELOVED COMRADES:—"The people that do know their God shall be strong and do exploits." This brave saying from the book of Daniel leaps up from my heart as I begin a loving Christmas letter to you. The Baltimore Convention and my enormous correspondence indicate that the pulse of our blessed "movement" is steadfast and strong as ever. Indeed, it seems to me to have gained in momentum and I expect this to be one of the best years, if not the best, in our history thus far. There is a new zeal for the increase of our membership, which must always be, next to the indwelling of the Spirit, the basis of the progress we so earnestly desire. Our next convention is to be held in California and each state and territory will, I feel sure, wish to be at its very best when we go to be the guests of our brave pioneer workers on the Pacific Coast. I can but hope that you are ready for a house-to-house membership visitation. This is the only thorough way to build up the work. In the month of January, when good women are making up their minds to be better, their hearts will be more open to your appeal.

The petition to the legislature for an appropriation to found an Industrial Home for Habitual Inebriates has met with a warm welcome here in Kentucky, and I am confident that in this "off-year" politically we can do nothing better than to urge a measure that is comparatively non-contentious and which must appeal to all people of good heart and good conscience.

Please have this printed in the papers throughout your state, both secular and religious. You will find it in the Christmas number of THE UNION SIGNAL in my letter, "Field Notes, No. 1."

The Loyal Temperance Legions can be greatly helped in their membership by inducing the children in our cities and our larger towns to collect the necessary funds to place on some public street "The Little Cold Water Girl" fountain, which so charmingly symbolizes the helpful spirit that we wish to impart to all the little people whom we can influence. Duplicates of this fountain cost but seven hundred dollars, and if the children will furnish this amount the municipal authorities will be quite likely to bear the expense of preparing the necessary foundation. May I ask you, dear friend, to think well about this, and see if something cannot be done to forward this line of work?

In view of the multiplication of "women's clubs," it is more than ever important that our local unions should introduce a course of study and reading. Doubtless this has been done in many cases, but by the influence of the state authorities it could be made much more general. It seems to me that Dr. Craft's "Practical Christian Sociology" is a book that we might study to the very best advantage. It is published by Funk & Wagnalls, and the price is $1.50.

I am sending you as a Christmas present a copy of the new edition of my handbook for workers, entitled, "Lo Everything," and I shall be very glad if some selections from it might appear in the press of your state, for I believe that in this way we may bring a better knowledge of our work to the general public.

Dear comrades, may this year be one of a deep and abiding consciousness of the presence of God's spirit in your heart and mine, and may we feel more keenly that it is indeed true that the joy of life is doing good according to a plan.

In this faith I am as ever lovingly and loyally yours, for God and Home and Native Land,

Frances E. Willard.

PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATIONS AND ADVERTISING THAT NEED TO BE CONDEMNED.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It had been my expectation today to write for the Christian Statesman an editorial referring in part to the immodest and sensuous pictorial advertising in many of the magazines and papers of the day, but it so happened that I last night caught the appealing words of the Deborah on duty in the Watch Tower of THE UNION SIGNAL, touching upon this very thing, and so, with pertinence, my response may flow back in the new direction.

In my paper upon "The Relation of the Press and Stage to Purity," read at the recent National Purity Congress at Baltimore, there occurs this passage:

"Obviously the stage is well entrenched behind the daily papers and well protected by them—the popular magazines likewise being largely its valuable supporters. In the latter connection I recall that one day last summer, while waiting at the house of a clergyman for the latter to appear, I looked through three of the magazines of the day that were on the parlor center table, and they each contained an article about favorite actresses, copiously illustrated, and in many cases sensuously so. It must be acknowledged that in many clergymen's congregations a large proportion of the members or attendants patronize the playhouse."

When a magazine has given entrance to immodest, not to say indecent illustrations of its reading matter, such as above referred to, can it be expected that its publishers will manifest that degree of moral strength which will enable them to refuse pictorial advertisements of the same vicious character, especially when accompanied by the large money consideration which is so effective in soothing the qualms of conscience. There is here opportunity for the readers of magazines to assert their sense of self-respect, if they will, and have the evil corrected. It has for years been my practice, on entering a barber's saloon, to immediately withdraw if I notice such reading matter as Police Gazettes on the chairs or indecent pictures on the walls, saying to the attendant that they are of a low character to which gentlemen are not accustomed; or, on the other hand, when cleanness in that respect is manifest, to express my appreciation of it to the proprietor' for, unhappily, the exceptions to such cleanness are only too common.

In the same manner, if magazines or papers viciously illustrated are sent to my house the editor or publisher is written to without unnecessary delay. Advertising agencies are very enterprising, and frequently secure the insertion of unworthy matter which may be overlooked (although this ought not to happen) by the paper's proprietor. To the publishers of a well known horticultural magazine I took occasion to send a protest several months ago, and received prompt reply that the "ad" came through an advertising agent, that the cut accompanying it was not noticed, and that word had already been sent to have a different one substituted, though the one complained of was "running through many publications." Very soon afterward the same illustration came to my house in that carefully conducted home-study magazine, The Chautauquan. It will do no harm to give Dr. Flood's reply to the protest there-against:

"I have read your letter of the 6th instant, and thank you for calling my attention to the advertisement of the ——— Company, which appeared in The Chautauquan last month. I do not like it, and I shall prevent its appearance again. Advertising matter is very troublesome. Advertisers are ambitious to attract public attention, even if it is by doubtful and wicked methods. There are some very wicked people in this world who would deceive the 'very elect,' if the 'elect' did not 'watch' as well as pray. Again thanking you for your letter," etc.

Forewarned, forearmed, my friend; yet I foresee that "the enemy," in the guise of the sensuous illustrator, will continue to come in upon thy far-reaching columns like a flood, and that he will hardly be turned aside without many a rebuke, and the standing legend flaming before him, "No pictorial advertisement of the sensuous sort received here at any price."

I remember meeting on the sidewalk in Philadelphia, severa years ago, the editor-in-chief of one of the best and most-quoted dailies in the country. Some public protest was at that time being made against the ballet, and, in stopping to speak to the aforesaid editor, who I knew greatly favored the so-called "legitimate drama," in relation to it, he remarked that "the introduction of the ballet into the drama was none other than an impertinence." We believe it to be descriptively worse than that, that by very many sad evidences it may be said to be, in the main, a synonym for impurity. And so I think we may say of the present wholesale introduction of the female figure, often indecorously attired or scantily draped, into the newspaper and magazine advertisement columns, as a would-be pictorial commender of corsets, cosmetics, soaps, skin cures, hair dyes and what not, that it is too often "an impertinence," and not infrequently worse than that; while the art and stage illustrations accompanying the text of articles in some of the popular magazines, run close along the border line, and even far within the danger domain of impurity.

The old year is now ending. Will you renew the subscriptions of such as the above for your homes and libraries, or will you assert your self-respect and sense of family and society responsibility by declining to renew, not omitting the complement of your duty by telling editor and publisher the wherefore?

INDIAN DEGRADATION IN ALASKA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—My co-workers insist that I give you some description of the situation in Alaska and I do so trusting I may not encroach upon your precious space. I am now in my fourth year of service as a missionary in Alaska, having served eighteen months of the time on Douglas Island, opposite Juneau, while my associates have served five years at the same point, and hence we have had some opportunity to observe the workings of the far-famed prohibitory laws of Alaska. My position was that of field matron among the natives of Douglas Island, and in the prosecution of my work I was obliged to mingle every day with the white population and I can safely say that never at any time did I see the slightest trace of prohibition. Whisky flowed like water, all classes indulged freely and openly. Licensed saloons flourished everywhere, while infamous dance houses of such character as would shock the most hardened unbeliever in temperance furnished diversions by day and night and caused the death of many a poor Indian woman. Such scenes as I have daily witnessed among these unfortunate natives would, I believe, if known to the W. C. T. U., cause very much the same sentiment as sent Dr. Kate Bushnell on her mission to the poor girls of the lumber regions years ago.

Two miles across the channel at Juneau there existed the same state of affairs, which was aggravated by the presence of government officials, who could if they would have done much to restrain this open lawlessness. At present there are sixty saloons in Juneau with a population of little more than 2,500. From this place tens of thousands of gallons of whisky are taken westward or carried over the mountains into the Yukon mining country. To keep public sentiment quiet an occasional seizure is made which is only a drop in a bucket in comparison with what is allowed to pass unnoticed.

Our present field of labor is among the Kake, or Kaak, Indians, whose native village is on Kupreanof Island, many miles from any established route of travel because of dangerous channels; yet even here the whisky smuggler follows with his stolen goods, dogging the steps of the natives and when, as occasionally happens, his life is taken by those whom he has made as infuriated beasts, all printed reports carefully conceal the real character of the white man, while justice very rarely attends the dealing with the Indian. Unsuspecting tourists are allowed to see only the most favorable side and thus have but a faint idea of the real situation.

Another point upon which the country at large is wholly ignorant is that regarding the illegal cohabitation of white men with Indian women. Early in 1894 highly colored reports were scattered over the states to the effect that United States Marshal Porter, since removed, was vigorously enforcing the law against all such white men, jails were crowded, and men were being prosecuted on every hand, etc., etc., and I was sorry to see that even THE UNION SIGNAL was deceived into joining the chorus of praise to the marshal, who was far too shrewd to thus injure his political future. The real facts are that a black man was prosecuted in Sitka, one white man in Juneau, and one in Fort Wrangel. These were the only cases we have ever learned of, though we made diligent inquiry. This social purity farce is enacted about once a year, just before the sitting of the United States court. The marshal gives notice that he will prosecute all white men living unmarried with Indian women. This notice is carefully circulated, the women are sent to their Indian homes for a few weeks, or till court is over, when they return to live on as before. I have heard white men discuss the joke in high glee.

The lives of these women are degraded in the extreme. They are bought like cattle, taught to indulge in every vice, and while commonly well dressed, are kicked, beaten and abused in every manner till death very frequently puts a hurried stop to their bad treatment. I do not wish to exaggerate in these statements for I expect to stand before the judgment bar of God with these men, but my heart burns for these women and I am longing for some soul strong and brave enough to plead their cause before the nation. A tourist can not learn these facts and the situation will never be understood till some person with the subject at heart takes up her residence at some of these points where she can speedily learn the truth of these statements. I can not but feel that the W. C. T. U. has a work to perform for the women of Alaska.

FRANCES LITER.

Oregon Friends' Mission, Alaska.

DEAR COMRADES:—As the New Year is stealing swiftly upon us and our faithful friend, Ninety-Five, is almost gone, as we say in that strange phraseology which speaks of Time as a past and a future, our hearts are taking account of the "deeds done in the flesh."

---

What a commentary upon the frailty of human resolve is this annual bookkeeping. We began our year with a good stock in trade of possibilities. How many of us at its close can do more than shed a tear over the queer pages, some fair, some blurred, some blotted, many hard to decipher because we "made mistakes," and our efforts to correct them only rendered results still more problematic. Sadder than mistakes, worse than tear-stains or evidences of hurried carelessness, would be blank pages on which no effort had been recorded. Heaven forgives mistakes, not idleness.

---

As our hand lies on the golden clasp of the Book of the Year, we are stirred by noble ambitions, holy desires, lofty resolves.

Giving wing to my imagination, dear comrades, I fancy I can hear passing up and down the columns of the white-ribbon army, such utterances as these:

"'God helping me,' I will hold closer to my heart during all this year, the interests of those who are banded together for God and Home and Native Land.

"I will keep more strict watch over my time and do more than I did last year for the temperance reform.

"I will study more faithfully than hitherto the questions that turn upon the legalized liquor traffic.

"I will remember more faithfully our daily prayer for tempted ones, for those who are indifferent concerning the enemy of righteousness in our land, for those who labor to bring in the white day of temperance, and for the coming of the kingdom of God.

"I will be more often upon my knees before the Word, seeking to know God's will for me in this 'bloodless war,' that I may not fai through soul-blindness to enter every open door of usefulness and self-sacrifice.

"I will endeavor by voice and pen to more faithfully spread the gospel of temperance among those who have not yet known an arrest of thought.

"I will conscientiously lay aside for the Master's use a tenth of what income may be mine.

"I will go out from my home more than I have in the past to seek for the outcast and the fallen, the discouraged and the homeless.

"I will make fewer feasts for those who need them not and spread my table oftener for God's poor."

---

What a rare chorus this is! Could the supporters of the liquor traffic hear it and know that for three hundred and sixty-five days the rank and file of the W. C. T. U. would live up to such resolutions, they would have solid ground for fear that their day of doom was dawning.

---

Now for a practical suggestion. As already stated, the early days of the New Year find hearts tender over past failings and ready to step out on "good resolutions." This condition may be our golden opportunity to bring many into the W. C. T. U. fold. But how shall we go about it? Listen: Personal work! But how may this personal work be conducted?

Try this method: Let each Local Union go a-calling. With a prayer in her heart and cheery good neighborship in her mien, let each member of the union besiege by house-to-house visitation her immediate neighborhood. I honestly believe if the W. C. T. U. would canvass for members as earnestly as a certain class of so-called church workers canvass to sell tickets for entertainments, our ranks would be replete and our activity unflagging.

I will ask you to write me touching the work you do in this way, that I may pass along your experiences for the encouragement of others.

---

And may the New Year bring you, through Christ Jesus, a continual growth in grace and in knowledge of Himself.

Mother Experience.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord? Then the chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers of the king's work, offered willingly.—I. Chron. 29:5, 6.

"Ah! this Temple has been building
Silently for many years;
Broken hopes and blighted longings
Its foundations laid with tears.
Little children wan with weeping,
Mothers lonely vigil keeping,
Wives whose dreams of love and beauty
Are but shadows cold and gray,
Joy shall yet join hands with duty,
God is on His throne to-day."

Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., in an article in the Chicago Advance, has the following to say in regard to woman's work: "The writer can bear personal witness to the remarkable movement among women, which has no parallel in history as to the growth of knowledge, zeal, activity, consecration and all else that is fundamental to the cause of missions. Half a century ago there was not one woman's missionary society in the world, and now in every Christian denomination, and almost every church, the women are organized for missions. And let us remember that these godly women have shown us that in all financial depressions and prolonged panics gifts could go right on in one sustained and actually increasing stream of beneficence! When women began to organize the first year's gifts aggregated a few thousand dollars, and the movement was a united one; now every denomination has its own woman's board, and some of them raise nearly half a million in a year."

The W. C. T. U. has probably as large a membership as can be found among women in any one of our denominations. The success which has attended women in missions in raising funds is due to their thorough organization and the united stand they take for the object for which they work. Very few of them give large sums but all give something, hence the large amount secured. Collectors are appointed in each church and every member called upon. In order to secure sufficient money to pay for the Temple this plan should be adopted by our unions. A Connecticut white-ribboner with great truth says, in regard to the Temple: "When the work is pushed systematically by a superintendent appointed by the National, we shall see better results. We should also have state, county and local superintendents of Temple work." It is hoped that all state presidents as well as all other officers in district, county and local unions will see to it that the call of the National executive, set forth in the "Trumpet Blast," is carried out.

The following officers and workers at the Temple have each subscribed five dollars in addition to those already reported: Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, Mrs. Caroline F. Grow, Miss Winnie Grow, Mrs. M. E. Kline.

A great many letters are coming to Miss Willard in answer to the "trumpet blast." All such should be addressed to Room 1118, the Temple, La Salle street, Chicago, as Miss Willard wishes them kept separate from her other mail, which goes to Evanston.

The following entertainment given by the Payson, Ill., W. C. T. U. is an admirable plan for unions to adopt where the individual members are not able to each raise their quota of five dollars for the Temple. Mrs. Augusta Hood writes that their union took in $31.65—twenty-five dollars of which was sent to pay on their hundred dollar pledge. The invitation reads: "You are very cordially invited to attend the BEGGAR'S AUCTION at the residence of Miss E. Scarborough, Saturday evening, October ——. Music and refreshments free. By order of committee. Payson W. C. T. U." Inclosed in each invitation was a little silk bag two inches and a half long. The following verse accompanied it:

Here is a little purse as big as a minute,
And this is the kind of coin we ask you to put in it:
A penny for each of the birthdays through all your happy years
(The most have been bright with blessings, if a few have been stained with tears),
The silver of kindly words, the gold of your heart's love true,
We know we shall find among them for the W. C. T. U.

After music and a social time a lap lunch was served and a most delightful evening was enjoyed by all.

THE ONE WHO STAYS AT HOME.

The wheels of the world go round and round,
In the press of the busy throng,
Morn with its matin melody,
And night with its vesper song;
The tides are out and the tides are in,
Like the sea with its ebb and flow,
For there's always one to stay at home
Where there is one to go.

Abroad on the highway's noisy track
There is rush of hurrying feet,
The sparks fly out from the wheels of time
To brighten the bitter and sweet;
But apart from the beaten road and path,
Where the pulse of earth runs slow,
There is always one to stay at home
Where there is one to go.

Over and over good-bys are said
In tones that die with the day,
When eyes are wet that cannot forget,
And smiles have faded away;
Smiles that are worn as over a grave
Flowers will blossom and blow;
For there's always one to stay at home
Where there is one to go.

Always one for the little tasks
Of a day that is never done;
Always one to sit down at night
And watch with the stars alone;
And he who fights on the world's broad field,
With banner and blast and drum,
Little dreams of a battle gained
By the one who stayed at home!

A GREAT SORROW AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

BY ELIZABETH GRINNELL.

I went away last spring to spend the summer. Soon after I had gone a great sorrow came to my neighbor. One of those pitiless children's diseases visited the household and left it destitute of its darlings. Three little ones wandered off to the eternal uplands together, leaving a more than ordinarily affectionate mother childless. She had been my intimate friend. We had said "Good-morning" across the little white fence for many years, and her children were almost as dear to me as my own. I longed for the weeks to pass that I might return and comfort her. I shed many, many tears, thinking how impossible it would be for me to comfort her, so little did I understand the devious ways of comfort. Visions of her irreparable loss came to me at night, and I wondered the disease in mercy had not taken her as well.

I returned in the fall late one Saturday night. My neighbor's house was quiet and I fancied the shadows of the great elms above it were darker and longer. I did not stop to think that in the morning there would be no shadows, though the elms would be there still. Sabbath, early, there was the sound of voices in my neighbor's yard. Children called at one another and ran about the verandas. I parted my curtain to look. There stood my friend in the door, smiling through uncertain tears and bidding a welcome to the children. They were poorly dressed, unpretty children, but they seemed perfectly at home as if they had been there before. Through the dining-room window I could see my friend seat them at the table and bid them eat their breakfast. They ate hungrily, as healthy children will, and told the mother stories, as I could see by their eager faces and the sound of hurried words. Then they disappeared but I heard them still.

An hour afterward, when the bells were ringing for Sunday-school, the front door opened and they emerged as fresh as roses in a dewy morning. They were dressed beautifully; not in old or homely fashion, as the children of the poor are often clothed by the charitable, but they wore pretty frocks and hats, and blouses with butterfly knots at the throats. I had called them "unpretty children" an hour before, but the bath and a loving hand had transformed them. As they came out on the veranda my friend picked pinks and marguerites, for each a boutonnière. Then they threw kisses back to her as she stood on the steps, they skipping down the path laughing.

I was surprised. My longing to comfort my friend had been almost a frenzy. Now, I somehow felt that the sort of sympathy I had in store was insufficient. I hastened across the lawn and found her in tears, it is true; but behind the tears was the shine of a comforting I did not understand. I saw that the hopelessness of grief had been resisted, and wondered at what I saw.

"Did you see the children?" she asked.

"Yes," I answered, "tell me about it; whose are they?"

Then she told me of them, we sitting at the uncleared breakfast table. They were children of the poor among her neighbors. Children who were strangers to pretty clothes and buttonhole bouquets, who had picked up all they knew from barren dooryards and an insufficiency of everything. They were not bad children, nor did they belong to the bad. Their parents were hard working, tired, complaining people, such as one meets everywhere.

My friend, in the early rush of her grief, had gone out to walk one Sabbath morning with no conscious purpose but to get away from her grief. She hugged it as she would have hugged her children could she have touched them. Suddenly a little girl, unkempt, climbed to the top of the fence in front of her. As quickly my friend caught and kissed her. That kiss was like an angel, it bore away the sharpest sting of her grief. Then the hour bells rang. "Where do you live?" she asked the little girl. "Over there," was the answer. My friend followed the child and besought her mother to let her have it for an hour. "I am bereft," she said. "There is no morning like Sunday morning for its loneliness. I hear the bells ring and they are like moans. I hoard my little one's unused dresses and clothe my grief in them. Of what use are they, they or my grief? 'Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God,' if only to loan them your children."

The woman consented, in pity, and the child went home with her new friend. On the way others were found and pleaded for. "You must let me have them," she said, "only for an hour or two. I am lonely and my heart is breaking."

In charity for the bereaved mother the mothers of the children consented. In their minds were strange thoughts that bore them above their every-day complaining. Had they been offered charity it had been disdained. But my friend had asked of them a charity; they were made to feel that they were her benefactors.

Every Sunday morning from that day the children were received, breakfasted, dressed and sent to Sunday-school, each with its spray of flowers, strange tribute to the memory of happy days. "Better to lay the flowers on little human breasts," said my friend, "than on unresponsive mounds in the churchyard."

Sabbath became her Bethel, and these children, if not angels, were little beings better than angels between her and the despair of grief. She plans for them, sews for them, looks forward to that one morning in the week with a satisfaction which the selfishness of grief never suspects.

I can see her through my window now while I write. She is combing out the tangles of a week, and brushing teeth that are pearls when she is done with them, and scrubbing grimy little hands and saying, "Your mother doesn't have time, you know, and I should be so lonely."

THE DRUNKARD'S DINNER IN THE WEST LONDON MISSION.

BY SISTER LUCY.

Since the West London Mission was started, now nearly six years ago, it has always been a custom to devote the last evening of the year to an organized effort to help a few of the members of that most miserable, degraded and hopeless of all classes—the London drunkard. For this purpose about three hundred tickets are issued for a dinner given each year on the 31st of December in Wardow Hall, which is situated in Sabo, one of the most densely populated, and formerly one of the most drunken districts in London.

The night before the dinner every public house in the districts where the various Mission Halls are situated is visited just before closing time by the sisters and other helpers, and every man or woman found in a more or less drunken condition is presented with a ticket. Permission to distribute the tickets is always asked from the barman or barmaid, and is invariably given, the sisters being generally received in a most courteous manner.

The interior of a London public house, especially a slum one, would be a most revolting sight to most Americans. Women are often found there in quite as large a proportion as men. The assistants are in many cases women also. It is seldom found, however, that many women avail themselves of this invitation. They accept the tickets, but something—perhaps a latent sense of shame in being publicly branded as a drunkard—deters them from presenting themselves at the dinner.

Many incidents of a tragic or comic nature occur during this public house visitation. In Somers Town, which is the property of Lady Henry Somerset, and in which she maintains a branch of the mission, the sisters were greeted in some houses with delight, the inmates evidently supposing they had come for the purpose of celebrating the season as they themselves had! At one house a little boy, with a delicacy of feeling hardly to be surpassed, pointed out the private door, with the remark: "Not that door, sister, that's the public one; the private one is here round the corner!" But the tragic side is uppermost—the greatest tragedy of modern England is to be found in the drinking habits of its people and the causes which lead to those habits.

This dinner, with its outcast guests, is perhaps one of the most heartrending sights possible to witness. One drunkard with the signs of his weakness and sin to be plainly read on his face is a sad enough object, but what must it be to behold three hundred of these gathered together?

After the good dinner the guests file up, one by one, to the hall above. To sit and watch them come up is almost unbearable,—each fresh face seems, if possible, more degraded and degenerate than the one which preceded it. Here and there may be seen in striking contrast to the others, the strong, capable face of a typical English artisan; these have found their way in through some mistake, and are potently ill at ease in their incongruous surroundings.

There can be no stronger object lesson to the moderate drinker than these pitiful results of moderate drinking. These men, on the lowest plane of humanity have all been moderate drinkers once. Now a nameless something about them seems to proclaim the hopelessness of their case, the apparent impossibility of any cure. For the first time in their lives, it may be, they are now brought face to face with the consequence of their present course of life. They are met and earnestly spoken to in the upper hall, by some of the most earnest and able men in London, men who acknowledge their kinship with the wrecks of humanity before them, and who speak from no platform of superior morality or well-doing. A large majority of the men present invariably sign the pledge—a small minority keep it. But even with the result that two only who have come under the notice of the writer were completely altered and regenerated, the dinner would be well worth giving; but these two are only the fraction of the results personally observed. There are, undoubtedly, very many more who date their reformation from the day of the Drunkard's Dinner. For such cases it has proved to be the last rung of descent upon the ladder of life, and from it and for the future the "climber upward turns his face" to a better and nobler ideal of life.

IN EARLY DAYS.

BY MRS. S. J. A. JUDD.

About sixty-five years ago, when I was a small girl, there was a general awakening on the subject of temperance and "What shall we do?" became the anxious cry all over the land. Everybody seemed to become conscious of an individual responsibility and many drew up a pledge never to drink whisky, and signed it.

It did not stop with personal safety and family pledges were formed. The parents' names were written first and then the name of each child according to age. I well remember the day our family pledge was written and signed by father, mother and my sister and older brothers. One brother and myself were too young to write and so father read the pledge to us and explained its meaning,—that we promised before God that we would never drink anything that could intoxicate; he gave us two days to think of it then read it again, and said it was a most solemn thing to have our name there, that God's eye was upon it now and always would be, when we were grown and away from home, and God would bring us to account if we ever broke it. I remember what a new feeling of solemn personal responsibility filled my young heart as he wrote my name and showed it to me. Soon neighborhoods wrote their names on one large paper—"Never to use as a beverage any spirituous liquor; no cider, beer or wine." Not long afterward town temperance societies were formed. These were the beginning of the temperance movement in our country. About that time the Washingtonians sprang up, and "No, no, oh, no; no, I never will drink any more,"—was sung from city to hamlet, from state to state, till Satan trembled and devised ways to retard the stream of pure cold water. Notwithstanding the Sons of Temperance and the Good Templars encircled the globe, God inspired women raised a crusade and the W. C. T. U. rushed forward shouting, "Babylon is fallen—is fallen."

Shout on, dear sisters, until not one stone is left upon another in all the high wall of Bacchus.

SANTA CLAUS IN 1895.

Old Santa Claus dear had filled up his sleigh,
And his eyes shone
bright as a nickel,
But when it was late and he could not delay,
He found himself placed in a pickle.
For his reindeer steeds ran away with a sniff,
And the air was cold as an icicle.
But he shouldered his pack in less than a jiff,
And went spinning along on a bicycle.

A TRUE CHRISTMAS STORY.

BY H. L. W.

A well regulated Santa Claus is supposed to finish his work before the Christmas morning breaks. But the sun had been awake some little time, and had bespoken to all a bright, merry Christmas when a certain Santa Claus came from the doorway of a certain house in Chicago and made his way down the street.

He was heavily laden, carrying in one hand a well filled market basket, the brown packages which it contained seeming to vie with each other as to size and importance. In the other hand he carried a large white valise, while from his shoulders was hung a smaller bag.

Had you peeped into the basket, under the brown paper covers and into the attractive-looking parcels, you would have prophesied a big Christmas dinner for some one, for there was nice bread, meats, vegetables, fruits (oranges and bananas) cookies and not-to-be-forgotten Christmas candies.

The old valise groaned with its burden of toys; I doubt if ever as unpretending looking a valise held such a variety and number of precious articles and things that make children happy.

But where did all these things come from and where were they all going to?

. . . . . .

It was a very poor quarter of the great city; the streets, or rather alleys, were short, narrow and dirty. On either side were rows of tenement houses, weatherbeaten and old with broken doors and sooty windows; indeed, the very sunbeams seem to lose their brightness as they fell upon the old gray roofs and tried to struggle in through the cracked and broken window panes. Yes, it was a wretched place, and on this winter morning everything looked deserted.

But within the houses had many occupants, a single house often accommodated a number of families, the several apartments of each consisting of at most two rooms furnished with possibly a stove, a couple of beds, a table and two or three hard chairs; the remnants of the morning meal might have been observed on the bare table (if meal it could have been called) a few dregs of coffee and a little hard bread. The children playing on the floor with some bits of broken glass and an old tin can or two were poorly clad, and I am sorry to say had unwashed faces.

It was a sad sight, but it seemed all the sadder to-day for it was Christmas day, Christ's birthday, a day when all should be glad. Although it was Christmas morning there were no signs of it here. Yet the children knew it. But their only Christmas consisted in standing before the shop windows and looking at the beautiful toys, the much coveted books and dolls. Oh, how much they longed to just touch one!—or, in gazing at the wealth of goodies displayed in the candy store windows, pressing their little red noses against the pane and intently scanning with wide open mouths and wondering eyes the tempting candy canes and rings and the appetizing pink and white gum drops and chocolates, all unconscious of Jack Frost as he bit the little fingers and nipped the little ears and noses.

Indeed, these children were not without thoughts of Christmas although they were poor, for as the Christmas tide approached they had talked and dreamed of the wonderful Santa Claus; but it was too much to expect that he would visit them—they were so poor.

No doubt their little hearts grew very heavy as they wakened from their dreams of Christmas trees and lovely toys, that Christmas morning to find the room as bare as ever and that Santa had not been there.

But they were not forgotten, for already Santa was on his way and very near at hand. Into the wretched quarter, down the almost deserted street, and past the dingy buildings he came, with the big basket and the white valise. He disappeared down a side stairway and along a walk until a little low building in the rear of a dilapidated tenement was reached.

A rap on the door was answered by a woman who in reply to the inquiry as to how many they were, said that in addition to eight children they had the measles inside. But that did not frighten the visitor. Here the Christmas dinner seemed to find its destination for it quickly disappeared within the door amid a flood of thanks. The white valise was opened and the children supplied with suitable gifts. Big Susie said she was "just crazy" for games, so she took the Tadpole game, Mary chose a doll, Robbie was supplied with a rubber ball and a picture book, "The Three Bears," Jimmie some blocks of the A B C order, Georgie and Charlie books, and wee Susie a doll in the shape of a large colored rag baby. How happy he left them!

At the next place Santa Claus had the misfortune to be taken for a peddler (it was not surprising as he is so little known in those parts). As he tapped on the door a woman was heard to say, "Don't let that peddler in! See what he wants." But Santa Claus did not seem to hear for when the children opened the door, in he went while the mother continued, "Oh, what did you let him in for? We don't want anything"; but it was soon discovered who he was and he was welcome enough. Here books were distributed all around in addition to a doll for Minnie; there was a game of cut up birds for Harry, and a doll for baby Charlie whose little eyes danced for very delight as he fondled it and called it his "dollie with the pretty ribbons."

A few minutes later Santa's tap on the door of a neighboring house was quickly answered by the children themselves. I rather think they saw him coming and perhaps suspected his mission, for they looked as if they did. Four very bright children were here, and they were very poor, for father had had no work for six months, so they said. Here Alice selected the Rip Van Winkle book and a doll, Annie a picture book and a doll, Clara the story of Robinson Crusoe, also a doll, and Georgie a doll and an A B C book. The shining faces and merry laughter told how happy they were.

But the old valise was not yet empty. Down another alley and again up two flights of stairs Santa made his way, and here four more children were made glad and gay, Josephine receiving the Jack Horner game, little Bertha a doll and picture book, Frank, sliced pictures, "Three little maids at school," together with the fairy tale of "Aladdin's Lamp," while Ulysses was made happy by a beautiful game of carpet bowls and an A B C book.

In another family the Brownies seemed to find their fitting place and owners in little Eddie, two years of age, and Nellie, three. The baby was furnished with a small china doll, dressed in white, with blue ribbons, and Charlie, a bright little fellow of seven, was highly pleased with a ship and a horn. In all there were twenty-four children visited and made happy, over fifty nice presents were distributed among them, together with a package of Christmas candies, which was left at each place and a bright penny around for luck.

. . . . . .

But you ask who prompted Santa to go on this journey? Back of the act is the thought, so back of the Santa was child thoughtfulness and love.

But who were the children that did this? It is said they were to be found in a certain Presbyterian Hospital in that great city, that in the days preceding Christmas they might have been seen busily planning, making and gathering together the gifts, happy in the thought of making others happy.

But the secret of it all was, these children had learned to love Jesus. They had crowned Him King in their lives, and with the crowning came an earnest desire to please Him who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto Me."

---

Two little brothers had been in the room during a discussion about Indians. Soon after their mamma noticed one, Frank, with a gun playing shoot, and the other, Lot, with a cloth diving at the air and rubbing some imaginary object.

"What are you doing, boys?"

Frank said: "I am shooting all the Indians so they cannot hurt white folks."

Lot said: "I am catching them and washing their faces and hands!"

Mamma thought it was civilization against extermination.

---

WHEN Frank first saw his little brother he looked at him very earnestly, then said:

"Why, papa, God took him to the barber shop before He sent him down to us."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—1896 is nearly here. Ho, for a Happy New Year!

Somehow the New Year's coming always makes me think of a motto. You all know what a motto is. Perhaps you have taken one and fastened it up where you could see it every day. Then the words became very well known to you and you grew to love them.

I knew some one who had this beautiful motto ever before her, on the wall of her room. The words always brought a happy look to her face when she saw them:

"Build a little fence of trust around to-day,
Fill the space with loving work and therein stay;
Look not through the shelt'ring bars upon to-morrow.
God will help thee bear what comes of joy or sorrow."

Miss Willard says that her motto for the coming year is this: Only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man. This means that every day in 1896 she is going to do unto others as she would that they should do to her. Can you tell me in what part of the Bible this happy idea is to be found?

Cozy Corner should have a motto—one of our very own. Who will send us one? Send as soon as you can after reading this Corner.

Then, too, will not each Cozy Cornerer who chooses a motto for the New Year write and tell us what it is and why she chose it? Affectionately,

Aunt Jane

A WELCOME CORNERER.

I am a girl eleven years of age. Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and my brother and sister and I have taken many a piece out of it for the temperance concerts. I am sorry to say there are three saloons in town, but I hope the temperance women will get them out before long. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U., but we live two and one-half miles out of town, so she cannot attend very often. I have filled four wheels and my little brother sent for one. It did not come. We have a flag on our schoolhouse. I love to read the Cozy Corner and would like very much to become a member. I go to the Christian church and Sunday-school.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING FROM THE GENERAL OFFICERS.

To all the Local Unions, greeting:

We wish you a happy New Year and we know the way to have it is to help somebody else up to a higher plane in thought, word and deed. At this season above all others, well disposed people are thinking what they may do to become better. They are making good resolutions, and a fresh impulse of the spirit seems to bear us all onward and upward. Let us of the W. C. T. U. seize the opportunity by the forelock rather than by the fetlock, and to this end we affectionately urge each local union to appoint a committee of house-to-house visitation for the explicit purpose of getting new members to join the group of white-ribboners who hold the fort for home protection all round the world.

This is one of the simplest things we can do and one of the most useful. Many of the younger women will help to carry forward this canvass for members, and let us not forget honorary names and the L. T. L., and by all means do not forget the Y's. Come, now, "it is easier holding hands;" let us make one solid advance and let our watchword be "We all belong."

Write a pledge for special use in the solicitation with space for women's names, honorary members next and then L. T. L's, and "let no guilty man escape," i. e., no moderate drinker. Let us seek especially the women who "have no time" and impress upon them that for that very reason they should join the W. C. T. U. since it is the greatest of time saving agencies, the mightiest conservator of energies; and let us sweep the youth and children on in a great wave of enthusiasm to the very threshold of the bright future they will thus help to bring in.

Yours for victory in '96—which will make it, indeed, a "Happy New Year."

THE RED CROSS.

When Florence Nightingale went to the Crimean War in 1853, with three hundred women nurses, and proved that civil service was absolutely necessary if those wounded in war were to be properly cared for, and proved also that much of the suffering attendant upon war is preventable, the real Red Cross work began. But it was not until after a Swiss named Henri Dunant, horror-stricken at the condition of the wounded on the battlefield of Solferino in 1859, wrote a book pleading for relief, that a conference was held in Geneva, and a treaty was prepared and signed by sixteen leading nations.

The sanitary commission in our late war did a grand service to the country, but there was no accepted code, so that supplies for the sick and wounded were not adequately protected, and no previously trained workers were available.

In 1869 Miss Clara Barton, worn out with work for our soldiers, went abroad to rest. While in Switzerland she heard of the Geneva treaty, and determined to do her utmost to have the United States join the international order. When the Franco-Prussian War came on Miss Barton learned what the Red Cross really meant. She says: "No record of needless inhumanity or cruelty to sick or wounded stands in the annals of that war. I walked its hospitals day and night. I served in its camps, and I marched with its men, and I know whereof I speak."

Again she said in a recent address: "The treaty has brought the war-making powers to know each other. Four times it has called the heads of these great nations to meet, through appointed delegates, and to confer upon national neutrality and relief in war. It has created and established one common sign for all military medical relief the world over, and made all under that sign safe and sacred. It has established one military hospital flag for all nations. It has given the people the recognized right to reach and succor their wounded on the field. It has rendered impossible any inefficiency of supplies, either medical or nutritive, for wounded or prisoners which human sympathy and power can reach. It has given the best inventions known to science for the proper handling of mutilated persons, whether soldiers or civilians. The most approved portable-hospitals in the world are those of the Red Cross. It has frowned upon all old-time modes of cruelty in destructive warfare; poisoned and explosive bullets are no longer popular. Antiseptic dressings and electric light on battle fields are established facts, and the ambulance and stretcher bearers move in the rear ranks of every army. These isolated facts are only the mountain peaks which I point out to you. The great Alpine range of humanity and activity below cannot be shown in fifteen minutes."

Miss Barton did her utmost to induce Congress to join the Red Cross League, but the treaty involving this was not finally adopted and signed by the President until March, 1882. She had suggested that to adapt the Red Cross to our needs in this country a change should be made in the articles of agreement and this has since been known as the "American Amendment," which adds service during such calamities as fire, flood, famine, pestilence and earthquakes, and includes war on the sea. Twelve great national calamities have been relieved by the Red Cross in this country: The Michigan fires, the Ohio and Mississippi floods, the Mississippi cyclone, the floods of 1884, yellow fever in Florida, an epidemic in Virginia, the Texas drouth, the Charleston earthquake, the Mount Vernon, Ill., cyclone, the terrible disaster at Johnstown, Pa., the tidal waves of the Sea Islands off South Carolina, besides ministrations to the famine sufferers of Russia.

The vital idea of the Red Cross is not charity but friendliness and helpfulness. It is a privilege to do for those in trouble; the Red Cross workers are neighbors in the good Samaritan sense; human brotherhood is their creed and nothing else than the true law of love as given by Jesus Christ is their animating principle.

Forty nations are now pledged to hold all the materials and stores of the Red Cross and its followers neutral in war and free to go and come as their duties require.

Miss Barton said in an address before the Women's Council: "Women have taken their full share in the work. Empresses and queens—as well as emperors and kings, lead these societies and its relief work in war, and while each queenly wife stands with her Red Cross hand on the epauletted shoulder of her war-meditating husband he will consider well before he declares war. This has been the case and will be again, and in the great millennial day when peace has conquered war and its standard floats out from the shining battlements the Red Cross and its workers will be in the van."

Godspeed our Florence Nightingale on her great mission to the martyr-nation of Armenia!

FROM CRUSADE DAY LOOKING FORWARD.

Again we approach our most memorable red-letter day. Other days may seem to mean more for action to the forces waiting for marching orders, but in this one we recognize the beginning of our new era, the forerunner of all the marked pages of our calendar.

Twenty-two years ago, in a still, white time of preparation for great gladness in remembrance of the coming of the Christ-child, the hearts of a multitude of chosen women in many towns and villages waited in special readiness to receive Him. Even as they waited He came. Filled with His power they went forth and began the turning of the way of the wicked upside down. Everywhere our women are preparing to celebrate this birthday of new purpose. What shall we bring forth this year to the waiting audiences which will answer our summons?

We have read and related to them again and again the account of the inspirational origin of the Crusade, its remarkable progress, its strange power, the tense exultation of spirit of that wonderful time; our "original crusader" has related personal reminiscences, our "graduate of the school of oratory" has more than once recited, "The Woman's War." Shall it be the same old story? It is a glorious story, but is perhaps becoming something of a vain repetition. To the children it is a legend from a remote, mysterious past, almost as old as the Acts of the Apostles or the strange powers hinted at in the early church. Men and women begin to say, "That is all gone by, what has it all amounted to? Seven devils worse than the first have entered in where you swept and garnished."

If when the preacher tells the gospel story he should stay back there where he finds his text, linger among the hills of Judea, lead us in Galilee along the shores of its inland sea, talk of what was done by the banks of Jordan, tell only of the healing of mind and body of those among whom the Master walked—only of God's great gift of salvation to the men and women of that day and age, it would be to us simply a beautiful classic. It is when he brings it down to us—tells us that it was "not for these alone but for them also which shall believe through their word" that it becomes a theme of living interest to which we can listen with swelling heart and untiring ear through all the hours of all the days of all our years.

Shall we not henceforth take our text from the Crusade Psalm only to trace therefrom the progress of that cause which still looks to "the executing of judgment for the oppressed, the giving of food to the hungry, the loosing of the prisoner, the opening of the eyes of the blind, the raising of them that are bowed down, the preservation of the stranger, the relief of the fatherless and the widow" and for "the ways of the wicked" a famous "turning upside down"?

It is the same crusade. The day of miracles is not gone by; they are still wrought by the great company the Lord has added to the crusading ranks. True, their course is now more distinctly traceable through human means, but to Him be all the glory. Let us lead the listening people along the paths we have trod since the Lord came to Hillsboro. For there is strange misunderstanding of our work; there are great teachers who imagine our only legitimate mission to be the reclaiming of lives already wrecked; there are companies of our own women ready to give up all effort because they cannot now close the government protected saloon in their midst; there are multitudes who have no conception of the completeness of our plan or understanding of its grasp on the future. What will the world be when full working force has been put on every line of effort indicated by our order; when we are scientifically informed and understand the laws of health; when all the children are taught, all our foreigners enlightened; when everybody reads our literature; when labor knows its salvation; when all prisoners of crime or poverty are helped; when we have enlisted the soldiers and sailors and railroad men and miners and lumbermen; when all our social relations have been evangelized; when none but righteous laws are made; when all lives are pure?

Let us bring everywhere on this day a solemn, forceful personal message to women. Let us say to them, Behold the intricate lines of this great plan of work. Understand that, carried out, it means a world redeemed from Satan's most potent thrall. What hinders? You! There is nothing like an adequate force put on the work. Do you not see that it calls for all? No woman can be spared. Think not that the responsibility is less because there are many like you. Its whole weight is upon every unresponsive woman!

Emerson's definition of civilization is "the power of good women." It is a blessed fact that the larger number are good women, but where is our united power? The concerted action of all the good and wise women of this nation would be a resistless force. When for a few brief days the powers of hell believed that the finger of God pointed to such an uprising they shrank and shriveled away in abject terror. When shall we clasp hands, and let God work through universal womanhood His supreme will? Doubtless not after the manner of that descending of His power which we commemorate, but surely in line with that since revealed. Never in the world's history, since the angel revealed to Mary and Elizabeth their wondrous consecration, has such power been laid upon the heads of women as in these last days. Into the hands of those always most believing and faithful to His cause hath the Lord of Hosts entrusted the unfolding of His plans. We stand in Divine Presence. Let us receive with awe our sacred commission.

SMOKE HOUSES.

We farmers' daughters remember the old-fashioned smoke house very well. In our girlhood we often "put on a few chips—just to keep the fire smouldering;" and after a bump or two from the hanging hams, they were so low and we so tall, we emerged from the smoke house blinded by tears and glad to sniff the pure air again. We ought to be used to smoke, I suppose, but we are not. I doubt whether even the Icelandic woman relishes the flavor and effect of bones burned in her ice hut to thaw walrus meat for sick child or mother. Smoke houses used to be exclusively for smoking meat. In later times there came to be smoking cars, and smoking rooms exclusively for smoking men! But it was soon found that the men never got done, and that they would not be restricted. If the offender of public taste and comfort could not be arrested and detained the next best thing was to arrest the innocent party and shut him or her up—in line with modern politics—so we came to have nicht rauchen cars for the general public and rooms exclusively for women. But the device of putting the muzzle on the wrong dog does not work well. "For women exclusively," in large letters upon wide open doors in a depot at Washington, stared us in the face for three long hours lately. Thoughts were not particularly clear or brilliant during that time on account of the dim haze that enveloped everything and penetrated to the delicate tissues of head and throat, making them tingle and smart; but we noticed that the women were "exclusively" in the room assigned to them; but that men came and went through the room, to and from the trains, carrying active pipes and cigars; and that young men lounged in the doorway lazily puffing their cigarettes as they scanned the docile women. The word docile is used advisedly. Later on, in a palace sleeper (?) late at night, the atmosphere had the same stinging effect, to the exclusion of sleep; and in the observation car the next morning all women excluded themselves, not voluntarily, but necessarily, except two, and one of these was finally obliged to retire after a manful fight (!) against smoke and the resultant sick headache.

It is no uncommon thing to be awakened at dead of night in a hotel by the penetrating fumes of tobacco and to be obliged to close the transom to the exclusion of all draft, while the nauseating atmosphere persistently creeps in at the crevices and destroys all hope of rest or sleep. Such everyday experiences give rise to the question as to whether the label "smoking apartment" in parlor cars, sleepers, etc., is not a misnomer, as to whether seats in street cars "exclusively for smokers" is not a misnomer, as to whether even "smoking car" is not a misnomer.

In day cars and street cars men not infrequently smoke unrebuked and not a few restaurants remind one of Germany where the brodchen often tastes so strong of tobacco as to nauseate the unaccustomed foreigner.

Is it not time to call a halt even at the bayonet of public comfort and happiness? Some consciences may be pricked by such considerations which cannot be reached for a long time yet by the pathology of nicotine. And still, when we remember a sick woman upon a stretcher and another in an invalid's chair apparently in an almost dying condition, both carried to the farther part of a large waiting-room in a depot, with friends fanning them and anxiously scanning the crowd of smokers, all of whom seemed unconscious of any discomfort on the part of sick or well, we almost despair of reaching the public male conscience on the subject of this outrageous nuisance. But so long as non-smoking men and women sit down quietly and endure, the evil will continue its encroachments. Women ought to assert themselves on this point of vital account to health and happiness. It is not an uncommon thing for women to say, "I dread the journey for I shall be sick the whole way on account of the smoke."

Is it not time that we cultivate enough of the Johnny Bull assertiveness to at least protest against tobacco smoke, where we have paid our money and are entitled to safe and comfortable transportation? Do we want our public places purified, or are we willing to continue to travel in "smoke houses?" It is said that a company in New York has issued an order forbidding smoking on its cars and riding on the platforms when there is room inside. It is a good thing that the delay caused by crowding through the habitués of the rear platforms is about to abolish those particular "smoke houses," which are, necessarily, the passage way for all. Pipes, cigars and cigarettes are simply intolerable. It is almost as disgusting to be blown upon as to be spat upon. Let us have some "exclusively" pure air, free to all, in our public conveyances. Let us ask to be comfortable, not by a show of being shut up, often where we can neither see nor hear, in the stagnated accumulation of vile smells that are supposed to be corralled in the hotel office below, the smoking-car ahead, or apartment next door; but let us demand that protection which will free us both from imprisonment and the "smoke house."

W. C. T. U. MEDALS.

A series of medals has been designed especially for the W. C. T. U. Contests for these are not to be confined to the subject of prohibition, but may include any of the departments of our work. The rules governing will be published soon, and it is expected that a book of recitations written mostly by our best known speakers, will be ready for the press about January 1. The medals are silver, gold, grand gold and diamond, and a gold one designed especially for "silver gray contests" wherein the "gray heads" are to say their pieces.

These medals are already on exhibition. All of them are decorated with our emblems and bear the letters W. C. T. U. on the bar. They are beautiful in design and workmanship, and will, we are sure, be an added inspiration to the contest work. This movement has received the indorsement of the National officers, Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, state president of Illinois, and others.

Madam Demorest has been consulted and writes: "There is not the least objection on our part to others getting up a system of contests with medals; the latter, of course we hope would not be so nearly like ours as to be mistaken for the Demorest medal, which so far has been won on a 'fair field and no favor' basis, a uniform number of contestants and a uniform set of rules governing each contest, and the medal won has been sent free of cost. They are sent free wherever the rules are complied with, and will so continue, we hope, as long as the cause of Prohibition needs the work."

Of course those choosing to do so will continue to use those so generously provided by Mr. Demorest and his family. But contests for the W. C. T. U. medals will offer a means of raising money by charging an admission fee, which, with other differences of regulation, will, it is believed, popularize them at once. It is already agreed upon that any one holding a Demorest medal will be admitted to the next higher W. C. T. U. contest. Mrs. Adelia E. Carman is the designer of the new series. She was formerly superintendent of Demorest contests in Missouri, and is now president of the Douglas Park union, Chicago. It is believed by her and many others that there is a field outside of both the Demorest and Cooper contests to be covered by the W. C. T. U. plan, and that no antagonism will be engendered thereby, but rather that temperance sentiment will be increased all the more, and the various phases of the great work popularized.

A LETTER just received from a white ribbon correspondent in London gives the following account of the farewell meeting to King Khama: "It was a wonderful event, and Queen's Hall was packed from ceiling to floor. Clergymen and ministers of all denominations seemed to predominate, as it was under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. Many of our white ribbon women were visible among the crowds. Sir Wilfrid Lawson was on the platform among the speakers, and Lady Henry was the only woman speaker, and although she had only a quarter of an hour she gave one of those forceful and heart-stirring appeals which she is so well able to do. The three Chiefs spoke most eloquently. They had the day before been received by the Queen, who had promised them to do all in her power to help their cause. Sir Wilfrid Lawson, as usual, kept the crowd in paroxysms of laughter; he found that in the language of the Chiefs, if they wanted to refer to anybody as the one who put things straight, they would say, 'Mutlahodi,' Sir Wilfrid turned round to Lady Henry and said, 'Under the circumstances, Lady Henry, you and I must henceforth be called Mutlahodis, as we exist to put things straight.' Lady Henry's eloquent reference to the woman question, when she turned to the chairman and said, 'There must be stalwart mothers in Bechuanaland to produce such stalwart sons,' elicited rounds of applause. She said she welcomed her brothers in black because they had the courage to set their faces against strong drink; and if all our 'most Christian Majesties' had risen to their level the history of Christendom would, before another generation passes, illustrate 'Paradise regained.' The value of Khama's record to the temperance cause was beyond computation. He had focused the gaze of the whole world on the sin and iniquity of selling alcoholic drinks to native races. She would like to tell these Chiefs that the little badge of white which she exhibited was worn by women in Cape Colony, Pondo Land, Griqualand, Transkei, Natal and the two Boer Republics, and it was their ambition to know that it had won its way to Bechuanaland. (Cheers.)"

MRS. GEORGE W. BAIN is a habitual reader of the city council items in the morning paper of her own city of Lexington. A few days ago she noticed that the brethren who make up that body had voted to permit a saloon in a quarter of the city where it was particularly obnoxious and where no saloon had been permitted for ten years. She therefore conferred with her pastor, Rev. Dr. Bolling, of the M. E. Church South, and a petition was drawn up setting forth the reasons why this act of the city fathers would be unbearable. Mrs. Bain and other white ribbon women circulated this paper and in a very brief period secured several hundred names. They then went before the council, Rev. Dr. Bolling made a speech and the obnoxious ordinance was then and there reconsidered and rescinded. It is this eternal vigilance that is the price of our liberties, we must be willing to go "just inching along." It will be observed that while our Brother Bain preaches as almost no one else can, our Sister Bain practices in a manner commensurate with her privileges as one who has long enjoyed "Line upon line, and precept upon precept."

"If this generation would object to bad bargains, the next would have fewer to make the best of."

NEWS FROM VARIOUS LANDS.

Last month the National executive of the British Women's Temperance Association met at Plymouth—the second great naval arsenal town in the United Kingdom. Plymouth is particularly interesting to the World's W. C. T. U. because of the great work of our white ribbon sister, Miss Agnes Weston, the superintendent of the World's W. C. T. U. department of work among sailors.

Miss Weston presided at a crowded meeting at the Guild Hall, when Lady Henry Somerset spoke. Sixty seamen, all teetotalers, in their picturesque uniform wearing war medals and temperance medals, acted as stewards. A deputation mounted the orchestra as members of the Royal Temperance Society. Not far away from the Guild Hall is the old Plymouth Quay, part of which bears the name "Mayflower" with the date of the departure of that gallant band for the new world. Now English and Americans are joined heart and hand to overthrow the slavery of modern days—the drink traffic.

Miss Weston gave me a most interesting account of her work among the men of the sea. She looks forward to the day when organized temperance work will be established on board American war ships. Not long ago, one bright Sunday morning, she stood on the main deck of the United States steamship San Francisco (one of the famous White Squadron) and addressed both officers and men.

The society of Christian Endeavor has several floating branches in the American navy. Miss Weston's periodical, Ashore and Afloat, and her monthly letters written to men and boys are circulated monthly in every ship in our national service. Thus she has a great hold on American Jacks from whom she is constantly receiving letters of gratitude.

A letter from a co-worker in the Mediterranean ports frequented by merchant sailors as well as naval men, while it discloses much vice of every shade also bears evidence to the vast improvement at Naples. As a reward to the Christian workers a yacht to be called the "St. Paul" is building to cruise about from port to port.

Sailors' Rests are also arising on all sides and doing well. A small Sailors' Rest has been opened on the coast of Ireland where one of the British guard ships lies—H. M. "Dreadnought." Great success has attended this new venture. Whisky shops are being closed and the blue jackets flock to the Teetotal Club. This augurs well for small temperance homes!

Recently Miss Weston has spoken on board H. M. ships "Sovereignty," "Volaga," "Empress of India," and "Endymion." A number of pledges were taken on each occasion and the commanding officers gave all possible help. Nearly ten thousand seamen and marine slept at the Royal Sailors' Rest, Davenport, during the month of October. Some publicans must be considering the situation!

FRANCE.

Dr. Legrain is now writing a book on "Temperance teaching in Schools for the French Government." He informs me the government has quite decided to do something on this important question. Dr. Legrain has founded a society to work against "spirit drinking." He says the French women will be emancipated if they interest themselves in this great social problem and the cause of temperance will make rapid progress.

NORWAY.

At the present time an agitation is going on in all Norwegian towns with might and main, to obtain a majority for the abolition of the associations for the sale of spirits. There is only a single place where there is peace and quietness on this point and that is Haugesund which is quite outside all law regarding spirits. A drunken man is a phenomenon in Haugesund; there are only four shops for the sale of beer and wine and they do very little business.

The consequence is, that a more honorable and more industrious working class than that of Haugesund is not to be found in Norway, and it may be said that the working classes have shown a capacity to tide over scarcity of work which can only be explained by the fact that the hundreds of thousands, which are spent in drink elsewhere, are saved up here and produced against a rainy day. Haugesund has experienced no evil consequences from their non-existence, but only good ones.

AUSTRALIA.

The president, Mrs. Nicholls, of the Australian W. C. T. U. has been making active warfare against the opium trade. She says that smoking and eating of opium in Victoria and New South Wales have become alarming. Eighty thousand pounds of opium are annually consumed in Australia.

The Premier of South Australia received a deputation from the W. C. T. U. last month, when he was urged to use his influence on behalf of a bill to prevent the unrestricted supply of the drug.

The branches of the British Women's Prayer Union held a meeting at Newtown, New South Wales, on the Armenian question. Lady Renwick presided.

Miss Ackermann has written from America, whither she has gone from Iceland. Her world wanderings as one of our missionaries in Alaska, the Sandwich Islands, Japan, China, India and Australasia have done much to establish our World's W. C. T. U.

The National W. C. T. U. at Baltimore has been an inspiration to those of us who live on this side, and with much joy I send my heartiest congratulations on the great success of your meetings. Miss Willard's address has set many of us here thinking deeply, and in the long years to come we shall read her words at Baltimore with reverent gratitude.

I wish we could have an up-to-date pamphlet on the use and abuse of alcohol in asylums and other public institutions.

I have been receiving letters every day with regard to beer in our English workhouses. One lady has complained that her imbecile son who is in an asylum is made to take two half-pints of beer a day. She has remonstrated with the medical officer but has only received the reply, "It is my custom."

Allow me to remind the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL that I have a large number of World's W. C. T. U. Minutes, price each, thirty cents postage free; also photographs of the group of World's officers and Polyglot Petition one shilling each. And I most specially urge all white-ribboners to send me orders for "Do Everything." This little volume, by Miss Willard, contains a full history of the white ribbon movement; it was written to meet many inquiries about our work, and has cost our leader much time, thought and expense. Could we not send it as a New Year's gift to our friends and by this means send forth the loving words and wise suggestions of the president of the World's W. C. T. U. to those far and near? The price of the work is one shilling.

I send to all my American sisters loving Christmas greetings. May God guide us in all we undertake in the coming year, and may it be one of abundant success to our work.

World's Wave Crests.

THE executive council of Victoria, Aus., W. C. T. U. has sent a cordial invitation to hold the next World's convention at Melbourne.

THE Life Line published at the American Baptist Mission Press, Rangoon, has been made the National official organ of the Burma W. C. T. U., instead of simply the Rangoon union as heretofore.

SAILORS' mission work in Queensland has been instrumental in bringing many to Christ. The enthusiastic superintendent, Miss Maggie Ogg, one of the Brisbane Y's, who really started this work, receives confidences from sailors of all classes and creeds, who write her all over the world of how they are keeping their pledges and influencing others. Donations of £100 and anonymously two £50 have been sent, and the public do much in supporting the work.

THE annual conference of the Victoria, Australia, W. C. T. U., gathered in Melbourne, November 18. The proceedings were introduced by an enthusiastic juvenile demonstration on Saturday. After the procession, addresses, singing and dialogues were given by the elders and children in the Town Hall, where the mayor presided. Many churches and Sabbath-schools listened to white-ribbon speakers on Sunday. The annual meeting on Monday was followed by a suffrage demonstration on Tuesday. There was also a grand stereopticon entertainment with sixpence admission fee, and a Y conference discussing the importance of temperance work for young women and how to arouse their interest in it.

BURMA W. C. T. U. convention held in Rangoon is reported by the Life Line as having been a decided success. The papers and discussions brought out most clearly the need for preventive and aggressive work. Especially encouraging were the reports from the work in the mission schools. Five hundred and thirty-four children gathered in the Children's Mass-meeting besides the adults. The Tamil and Telegu schools numbering two hundred and seven occupied one side of the church, the Burmese schools the other and the English the center, all being much interested in the addresses and taking part in the singing. The convention has provided for the translation of temperance literature into Burmese and Karen.

A SOUTH AFRICAN correspondent sends the following interesting "asides" of their recent sixth annual convention at Kimberly: "The weather was unfortunately unbearably hot. The perspiring convention rushed out to a woman and bought blouses. The heat was quite unseasonable and most of the delegates had only supplied themselves with warm clothing. On Sunday afternoon we attended the native service in DeBeer's Compound. Several of the ladies spoke to the natives who seemed very attentive and interested. The Compound, I must tell you, is a huge inclosure well guarded, in which all the natives employed in DeBeer's diamond mines are kept. There are about two thousand inside, and they are as happy and well looked after as they can be. One of the managers told me that several of the 'boys' had been in four years without wishing to go home to their 'kraals;' of course, they can go if they like, but as long as they are in the employ of the company they must live in the Compound. No drink is allowed to be brought in, and they are fed on the best of everything. The Compound, for the most part, is covered in with wire netting, to prevent the natives throwing the diamonds covered with mud in old tins to their friends outside; in spite of the strictest supervision, however, many diamonds are carried away. There is a large swimming bath in the enclosure, and a hospital for the natives which appeared the perfection of comfort, order and cleanliness. The natives are inveterate gamblers, but since cards have been kept out of the Compound as well as drink, peace is the order of the day, and the different tribes dwell together in unity and good fellowship."

CONNECTICUT.

GLEANINGS HERE AND THERE.

The first parlor meeting of the Greenwich union was largely attended. The interesting program consisted of a paper, selected readings and music, after which tea was served. The union now numbers over one hundred members.

At the Fairfield county convention this union was awarded the banner for the greatest gain in membership. The members feel it to be a matter of pride that the names of Mr. F. E. Murphy and his wife are on the list of their honorary members; they were placed there in recognition of their services in the town.

Mr. Murphy has lately held a series of largely attended gospel temperance meetings in Ray's Opera House under the auspices of the union. Many new names were added to the W. C. T. U. An afternoon reception was tendered Mr. Murphy and wife at the union headquarters.

Willimantic union has formerly held its meetings on alternate Saturday afternoons, but at the annual meeting this fall it was voted to hold them Friday evenings for the convenience of many. It was also voted to furnish THE UNION SIGNAL for the editors of the two city papers and the School Physiological Journal for each teacher in the public schools.

This union has devoted much of its time and effort to the support of a reading-room for street boys and has not done as much work in other lines. This has now been given up and they will turn their energies into other channels.

The semi-annual convention of New London county met at Wequetequock. Mrs. Hattie L. Main, president of the local union, welcomed the visitors in a very cordial manner. Mrs. Ida M. Pegrum, of Watertown, state secretary of Y's, gave an interesting talk on her work. Miss E. P. Nichols, state corresponding secretary of Rhode Island, and Mrs. Mary Frost Ormsby, of New York city, were present and made addresses. Mrs. Cornelia B. Forbes, state president, added interest by her suggestive thoughts on various lines. Miss Harriet E. Holmes, of Mystic, county superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, gave a most excellent talk on her work. Mrs. C. H. Lamb, of Mystic, county superintendent of evangelistic work, read a paper which showed much good is being done in that department. Mrs. Annie C. S. Fenner, of New London, county superintendent of franchise, gave an interesting account of her work, as did Miss Bessie Van Patten, of Pawcatuck, county superintendent of press work.

Mrs. C. H. Fitz Gerald, state superintendent of juvenile work, gave a very interesting talk on her department. Mrs. Amelia Thorp, of Pawcatuck, county superintendent of purity, spoke briefly on her work. Mrs. L. M. Smith, of Hanover, gave a good report from the Temple committee. The convention was in every way a success.

The Pawcatuck union held its annual meeting in the W. C. T. U. rooms and had an excellent showing for the work of the year. Each of the five officers and ten superintendents read written reports and several standing committees did the same. The union has held sixty-six meetings during the year, and the average attendance was nineteen. Eight dime suppers, one supper with the Westerly union, a bazaar, a New Year's reception, dime social, picnic, excursion, trolley party, birthday reception and moonlight sail, have been enjoyed and from these sources the net receipts have been $380.16. Twelve public meetings have been held, besides gospel temperance meetings.

The superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion work reported regular weekly meetings, with an average attendance of eighty-four pupils. The entertainments were a strawberry festival, a soap bubble contest, a program furnished by the W. C. T. U., a dime supper, a joint reception with the union and a harvest celebration. The receipts of the Legion were $101.55 and the expenses $77.11.

Meriden union is holding monthly socials to increase membership and build up the social aspect of the work. Mrs. Fessenden gave a lecture under the auspices of the union, and of course she interested all who heard her.

The delegates to the county convention at Moodus were welcomed to the church, whose attractive interior was made more cheerful by flowers and draped flags tied with white ribbons. Mrs. Sarah Marvin, county president, was in the chair.

The cordial addresses of welcome were by Mrs. J. E. Emmins and Rev. Jabez Marshall. Mrs. Alice Shepard responded in the same happy spirit. Kind greetings were sent by Mrs. Forbes, state president. From opening to closing exercises the convention was of interest. Every union in the county was represented by delegate or letter, with good tidings of work accomplished.

Mrs. O. A. Smith, superintendent press work, stated that she had received more reports from local press superintendents in 1895 than in 1894, and more interest was shown in this department. Miss H. E. Culver, superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, reported all the schools in Portland supplied with the indorsed text-books, and believed they were faithfully used by the teachers as required by law.

A bright and attractive program was fully carried out at Middlesex county convention. Miss Pugh and Mrs. Ellis, with Mrs. Buell, gave the addresses. Most cordially were the workers entertained, and the day was thoroughly enjoyable.

STATE CONVENTION.

Our National organ cannot give space for a full report, so we will give some of the very best things of that excellent gathering—our annual convention. The well-known speakers from outside our state were Mrs. Ellis and her daughter, of New Jersey; Miss Clara Parrish, the capable National organizer; Mrs. Emilie McLaughlin, the eloquent president of Boston W. C. T. U., and Mr. John G. Woolley, the stirring orator.

The president's address treated past success and future effort in a masterful style.

Numerically our union is advancing; financially it is prosperous.

Many pleasant incidents occurred during the session, and it was a harmonious gathering in all respects.

CALIFORNIA (NORTH).

OUR SIXTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

has come and gone. For the first time in twelve years the state convention has come to San Francisco, our chief city. Then we came experimentally, now, with the confidence of an assured position in the world. The recollection of that early meeting is almost funny and almost pathetic. But, oh, how delightful the rare association of kindred spirits and the inspiration we took home from it.

It was not a large body, in the old Y. M. C. A. hall; not so large as any of our county conventions now, but it must have felt itself sprouting for future growth. Mrs. Mary Frank Browne presided as graciously as if the meeting had been as big as the World's Convention now, and knowing we had precious little in our unorganized state to report, she summoned her workers to appear with timely papers which certainly were leaders for us. Nellie B. Eyster, with prophetic soul, read one on suffrage; how daring we thought her. Let none speak lightly of that meeting. It was fruitful in results; if our larger ones now do proportionately, the work should prosper.

This year's meeting was in the new and beautiful hall of the Y. M. C. A. which was filled five days with interested congregations.

Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet, the president, is a general; her well-organized and well-officered counties attest that. Her annual address proved her statesmanship by its broad and deep considerations.

I don't remember that anybody in particular welcomed us, in the long ago, but this time the welcome was wide and warm. The mayor sent his representative, the clergy, the board of education and various kindred organizations were on hand to fellowship the W. C. T. U. to which Mrs. Lydia Prescott responded gracefully in words, and Mrs. S. R. Bailey in song.

The corresponding secretary's report showed active and earnest work throughout the state. Ten towns are reported under prohibition (this does not include Southern California) and no eastern reader can possibly comprehend how big that number ten is to us. Forty women have been elected school officers, county superintendents or district trustees, for it is one of the anomalies of California law that women are eligible to offices for which they may not cast a vote; however, it all helps to create sentiment for equal rights.

Santa Clara county takes the banner for having made the highest percentage of increased membership. San Jose has the largest local union and has raised the largest amount of money.

The department of franchise has been greatly stimulated by the pending constitutional amendment upon which the men people will vote next November.

Mothers' meetings are growing into more use generally, than which there can be no better sign of the unions' vital worth.

There was but one adverse criticism of the program—that was, that it was too full to be assimilated. Surely, it had something for every one. The reports of county presidents and state superintendents were necessarily limited in time and enhanced in interest. A series of valuable papers and discussions were given on "Total Abstinence in Physical, Moral, Political and Social Science." A valuable symposium of local presidents was an important feature, also one of county presidents. David Starr Jordan, president of Stanford University, gave an effective evening address on "The Sober Mind."

Miss Severance gave her fine address on the "Evolution of Woman," illustrated by tableaux for a pay evening to a fine and appreciative audience.

A grand gold medal contest, given under the arrangement of the superintendent, Miss McLean, was a great success, the medal being awarded to Aimee Murrels Ray, of Sacramento, between whom and Julia E. Rix, of Alameda, there was but a quarter of a credit's difference.

There was nothing finer in the whole program than the lecture of Mrs. S. M. M. Woodman on "Citizen Suffrage."

Few changes have occurred in the list of state superintendents, most of them continuing to serve. The departments of mercy and physical culture have been taken up. This state has duplicated the departments of the National union as fast as practicable, besides originating some that the National is but now taking up. The departments of viticulture and song were first instituted here, as well as those of law enforcement and Indian work, to which the National has just appointed superintendents. The office of state evangelist was created, and Mrs. E. G. Greene appointed to fill it.

The state convention was characterized throughout by earnestness and harmony, and it is felt that a new year is entered upon with favorable conditions.

The election resulted as follows: President, Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet; corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. E. Brown; recording secretary, Mrs. Dorcas J. Spencer; treasurer, Mrs. Emily Hoppin; auditor, Mrs. M. A. Caughlin; all but the last being the old incumbents.

An unfortunate accident befell one of our delegates, a stranger in the city, who either in getting on or off a cable car, was thrown to the pavement and sustained a fracture of the skull. There being no one present to identify her, the inference in the mind of the nearest policeman was that being insensible, she was intoxicated. She was accordingly carried off in the patrol wagon to the receiving hospital, where her white ribbon was recognized by the officers and a messenger promptly sent to the convention to report. Every kindness was shown to her and as soon as possible she was removed to St. Luke's Hospital, where she was attended by skillful surgeons and trained nurses, until able to return to her home.

The department of law enforcement under its active and persistent superintendent, Mrs. Rose M. French, has done splendid service for several years. Mrs. French began her work in securing the prosecution of those who sold liquors to minors; this led naturally to other violators of law, and Mrs. French is well known in the criminal courts and prisons of the city. Just now this community is horrified by revelations of crimes against little girls, perpetrated by a number of men. Mrs. French has assisted materially in working up the cases. There was at first a fear that the wealth of some of the guilty parties might enable them to evade the penalties of their crimes, so it was decided to work up sentiment.

A preliminary meeting was held at headquarters and a mass-meeting of women, in which several societies joined, was called for Sunday afternoon. The county president, Mrs. H. H. Luse, presided, and the state president, Mrs. Peet, was the first speaker. It was a wholesale sort of mothers' meeting, only women being there, about fifteen hundred of them, earnest and thoughtful. The meeting adjourned to another large church next Sunday—committees having been appointed to formulate plans for permanent work.

The resolutions passed by these mass-meetings smack strongly of woman suffrage. It all goes to make women think what the ballot must be worth, while many men who have never before indorsed woman suffrage have been converted by the acknowledged necessity in these cases for women's work. The chief of police called upon Mrs. French to assist a police captain to work up the matter and take the depositions of the outraged children.

Her work has been publicly recognized by resolutions from several mass-meetings, asking the police commissioners to create the office of "inspector" for her, to work under police authority. The present law requiring a police officer to be a voter, rules her off the force, but it is hoped that this general request may be heeded, and a woman may have her official place in this municipality, where her excellent service has been fully recognized.

The contagion of interest spreads, and the unions of Oakland, San Jose and Stockton have called mothers' mass-meetings for the promotion of purity.

News in a Nutshell

THE W. C. T. U. Herald is the title of the new official organ of Iowa. It is ably edited by Mrs. L. D. Carhart, Marion, state treasurer, and is a live exponent of the great reform.

THE reception given by Dr. G. H. and Mrs. Sarah D. LaFetra at their hotel in Washington, commemorating the twenty-third birthday of their youngest son, Edward, was unique and delightful. Speeches and poems of congratulation were responded to by the young man.

MRS. MARGARET R. DENNIS, of Richmond, Ind., died December 5, at the ripe age of seventy-one. She was president of the Mary F. Thomas W. C. T. U. of which she has been a member since the Crusade, and highly esteemed for her abounding charity.

MRS. L. H. PLUMB, of Streator, has given the W. C. T. U. of that place the use of three rooms over the bank, on Main street, for an indefinite length of time; two were furnished ready for use. Our earnest wish is that many more unions had a Mrs. Plumb in their midst.

GREELEY, Cal., W. C. T. U., in a town of five thousand and no saloons, has a membership of one hundred enthusiastic workers. Much literature has been distributed, mothers' meetings held of great interest. At the annual meeting, one hundred and fifty guests enjoyed a happy evening.

THE evangelistic training school that Mrs. J. F. Willing is founding at 463 West Thirty-Second street, New York, has a fine group of young women already gathered. They have a school-room 30x40 feet where they could learn the bicycle, and if anybody has a machine to lend or give it would be of great service to these earnest workers.

CHATHAM, N. J., a town nearly two centuries old and usually conservative on most questions, was stirred recently during a course of temperance lectures given by Major E. T. Scott, when the Methodist, Congregational and Presbyterian churches held three union services Sunday, December 8. Major Scott spoke morning and evening, Mrs. Scott at the afternoon meeting. A strong temperance sentiment was the result. The pastors of those three churches must be progressive and aggressive.

DR. BOOLE and Mrs. Ella Boole, of New York, closed a series of Gospel and Good Citizenship meetings in Kent, O., December 12. The last night Mrs. Boole gave her lecture on "Deborah in Battle" to an appreciative audience. It was getting late but the audience insisted on hearing from the Doctor once more before their departure. He responded by arraigning in a masterful way, the Christian men forbeing cowardly in this war for righteousness and compelling the Deborahs to march to the front. Much good was accomplished by both Dr. and Mrs. Boole.

OHIO has been the scene of Mrs. Skelton's labors since convention. She has organized four unions and added 132 to the membership of the state. She closed a week's meetings in one town with a Christian citizenship rally. The church was profusely decorated with "Old Glory;" patriotic songs were sung and gentlemen present were called upon to give their ideas as to what constitutes Christian citizenship. This was received with so much enthusiasm that Mrs. Skelton is resolved to carry it out wherever practicable in future.

AMONG the first to enlist in the warfare against intemperance was Mrs. Sarah W. Tudor, of Maryland, recently passed onward. For twenty years she has been an active worker in the state and local W. C. T. U., her own special department being THE UNION SIGNAL and literature. She had looked forward so eagerly to the National W. C. T. U. Convention held in Baltimore in October, but at that time she was so weak and feeble that only by a great effort was she present at three sessions. But she deemed it a great privilege to be permitted to witness the growing enthusiasm in the cause she loved so well.

PLAN OF WORK FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF THE RELATION OF TEMPERANCE TO LABOR AND CAPITAL.

We cannot exaggerate the importance of this department of the W. C. T. U. It is the coupling pin that links our aims and principles with those of the wage-earners and their organizations. On the one hand we must seek to get them to adopt our principles into their platform and their practice, and on the other we must appreciate their situation, recognize their just demands and help to interpret them. Christian society in our own land has not been sufficiently alive to the labor problem. Unless we recognize the real grievances of wage-earners, and manifest a will to help and unflinching loyalty to their interests, we may find the door of their hearts closed to all that we can say of Christ, or of the Christian principles we seek to inculcate by means of our organization.

First, then, let us deepen and broaden our study of the labor problem so as to get rid of any dogmatic views that might interfere with free investigation; let us seek the best light and all possible light touching the question. Why has the labor problem acquired such prominence in our age? What are the modern changes that have so effected laborers? What is a living wage? Why do wage-earners demand that eight hours constitute the day of labor? Is there an unearned increment? Is the present environment of laborers' homes necessary? Is there need of slums?

In Europe as well as in our own country, there are a few employers intent on discovering the solution of the labor problem, and on securing for their own laborers every advantage and opportunity possible. They join scientists and wage-earners in investigating the industrial system and all that it involves, and animate laborers to recognize the solidarity of their interests, and to combine for their protection. A change in political economy is taking place so that its teaching has become more humanitarian. "Man is the beginning and end of our science," is the striking sentence that begins the twenty-first edition of Roscher's celebrated German work on political economy. All are beginning to recognize that in this era of progress, and especially in this broad land of plenty, honest men who are industrious ought not to toil the whole of every day and all of their days for the bare wherewithal to live. Their wives and young children ought never to be dragged into service to help to maintain the family in poverty and discomfort.

To open our minds, blinded by custom and tradition and unaware of facts vital to the interests of our fellow citizens, we must seek help in current literature, through lectures and by direct contact with the people. As profitable for entering upon the subject, the following literature is recommended:

The article on "Labor," in Encyclopedia Britannica; "The Labor Movement; The Problem of To-day," by George E. McNeill, which discusses the labor problem from the workingmen's point of view; "A History of Socialism," by Thomas Kirkup; "Contemporary Socialism," by Rae; "Socialism of To-day," by Lovebye; "Socialism and Social Reform," by Prof. R. Ely. The reports of the United States Commissioner of Labor abound in valuable material. The fourth annual report on "Working Women," and the seventh special report on "Slums" are particularly recommended. The opening chapters give a summary of the contents. The Homiletic Review, New York, contains elaborate discussions of the social problem, edited by Dr. J. H. W. Stuckenburg; and tracts on temperance and labor will be published by the W. T. P. A. from time to time.

Meanwhile what action is required of us? Miss Frances E. Willard pertinently says, "Get into touch with the labor people themselves, gain their confidence by deserving it; and then stand as loyal mediators between labor and capital. Interpret the gospel of the Golden Rule to each by voice and pen. There ought not to be a state convention, nor a county convention, nor a large meeting of the labor people in which a white ribbon woman does not have a part. And in order to accomplish this, every state president must see that this department is thoroughly organized. At the labor conventions get them to adopt resolutions of as much prohibition as you can secure, equal wages for equal work of women, better laws for the protection of women, the ballot for woman, scientific temperance instruction in the public schools, physical culture in the public schools, and also in favor of Industrial Homes for habitual inebriates instead of confining them to jail as is the present idiotic custom. Try to lead them to see that total abstinence and a rest day are for their interest. Try to get them to see that the New Testament is the best text book of the labor reform, and Christ and His gospel their very best friend. Try to get them to distinguish between a dead church and a living gospel and to feel that if Christ is wounded in the house of His friends, it is their business to heal those wounds instead of sitting down and howling about them."

In different localities the opportunities as well as the methods of work must vary according to the situation of the laborers, the peculiarity of their employment, and will be somewhat determined by nationality and religion. Let us not flinch before the Roman Catholic problem. The McCall Mission has a valuable lesson for us here. Working wholly among Roman Catholics in France, they lead them to study their own version of the Bible, and into a deeper, truer recognition of Christ. Out of her long and valuable experience Jane Addams, of Hull House, tells us that "we shall never lift up the people so long as we work for them. We ought not to work for them, but with them." Working, then, as Christ did with the common people until they "hear us gladly," we shall hope to get the brotherhoods throughout the land to see that alcoholic beverage is the insidious foe of the poor man's wage, laying increased burdens upon the dreary lot of his wife, lessening the opportunities for his children to rise, brutalizing the home and degrading the man himself.

What is the relation of our department to capital? Paul has a wise word on that, I. Tim. 6:17, 18. Recently, the wife of a capitalist and large employer said to me. "Tell us what to read. This labor problem is vital to every one of us. My husband is seeking all the light he can obtain, and you know they often look to their wives for help and influence." The great benefactions to noble institutions from America's men and women of wealth witness to their responsiveness to humanitarian and religious appeal.

Seek to make the relation of employer to the employed a personal one. Get the employer to study the situation of his laborers and what he can do for their welfare and that of their families. Capital and labor ought more and more to recognize that they are partners in the great industrial system and that the only rational and safe method is coöperation instead of antagonism. Amid the growing class prejudice and class distinctions it is important to emphasize those higher concerns common to all members of the human family and in particular to Christians.

Sisters of the W. C. T. U., we are standing before a great opportunity. We can stretch a helping hand to an entire class emerging into better conditions. Although in some of the laborers' meetings, in their strikes, and in their agitation they may seek after some false ideals and make mistakes, let us nevertheless believe in them, and hold on to their cause wherever it is righteous, working for the Christian equality and liberty their efforts will help us to realize. Our constant aim should be to influence the movement in the direction of morals and religion, with an especial emphasis on temperance as an essential condition of individual, and social well being.

NON-ALCOHOLICS IN MEDICINE.

This department has not been worked by the National W. C. T. U. for some years except through the Temperance Hospital. At the Baltimore Convention it was taken up again as a branch of our work. Some of the states have continued the department although there has been no National superintendent. From all such states I should like to hear as soon as possible with outline of plan of work, and brief report of what has been accomplished. New Hampshire has already sent name of its superintendent, but no other state has done so.

Where there is no superintendent state officers are kindly urged to seek some capable and willing woman to take up this department, and as soon as possible put her in communication with me.

This department is as necessary and as important as any now in operation by our organization. Large numbers of temperance people, even many of our own membership, are still unacquainted with the fact that alcohol as a medicine is as delusive and dangerous as is alcohol as a beverage. Calling it medicine does not change its poisonous nature. To bring the teachings of eminently successful non-alcoholic physicians to the attention of the membership at large of the W. C. T. U., and through them to people in general will be the aim of this department. When the multitude has learned that all disease is more rapidly and surely cured without than with alcohol, other things being equal, one of the greatest strongholds of the liquor traffic will have fallen. How many W. C. T. U. women are ready to help spread abroad the marvelous truths concerning alcohol and disease which advanced medical science is now teaching? Let every such woman write to me as soon as she can do so.

Local unions should occasionally hold a meeting for the study of this subject, with a paper prepared or selections read, and discussion following. I have recently published a leaflet adapted to such meetings, called, "Is Alcohol Useful or Necessary as Medicine?" It is sold at one cent each, or fifty cents a hundred, and should have wide circulation. At county conventions this theme can be presented by a paper, or through a question-box presided over by a woman, who has carefully studied the best literature on this subject. Any one appointed to such work may write to me for helps, and they will be gladly supplied.

There is much to encourage those interested in destroying the common delusions regarding the efficacy of alcohol as a remedial agency. At the last annual meeting of the American Medical Association, considerable time was devoted to a symposium upon alcohol in medicine, and the papers were printed in the journal of the association which has a large circulation. Thus wider publicity was given to the views of radically non-alcoholic physicians. Another encouragement is the organization among physicians of the American Medical Temperance Association for the avowed purpose of studying alcohol scientifically. The organ of this association has recently been changed from a quarterly to a monthly, under the name Monthly Bulletin of the American Medical Temperance Association. It is published by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., at one dollar a year, and should be taken by every woman interested in this department. Unions could not use money more wisely than to subscribe for this magazine for physicians who use alcohol.

Some of the most eminent medical men of this country are interested in the attempts of the W. C. T. U. to diffuse knowledge regarding non-alcoholic treatment of disease. As superintendent in New York state for the past six years I have been nobly aided by men whose names are known on two continents. Some have written expressing pleasure that the National has now taken up this work and pledging assistance. May I not hope soon to receive the names of many women ready to co-operate with these men of science in dispelling the alcoholic delusions which becloud the public mind, and so greatly hinder the onward march of temperance?

Cor. Secy's Notes

Responses from circular letters to state presidents and corresponding secretaries are most encouraging. I find about a dozen of the states are already fully equipped, and starting on a campaign for new membership. Some of the methods used are most ingenious, and all show great earnestness of purpose in carrying the work forward along more progressive lines during the coming year. I have been especially pleased with copies of the circular letters sent out by the corresponding secretaries of Illinois, Indiana, and the "Crusade Call," signed by the four general officers of New Jersey. Such earnest, fervent appeals can not fail of bringing the desired results. The president of New Jersey also sends a letter each week to the local unions, through the columns of the New Jersey Gazette, which is an example well worthy of imitation.

The discrepancy in statement as to the destination of the white ribbon star-spangled banner at the next National Convention must have been apparent to you all. I did not know, when announcing in my Corresponding Secretary's Notes, that it would be given to the state paying the largest amount of L. T. L. dues into the National treasury, that THE UNION SIGNAL had already stated it was to go to the state making the greatest gain in actual membership. I do not yet know from whom that statement came, but the matter will be decided and a definite announcement made at an early date. Some of the states, and especially individual members, are objecting to the prize plan, holding that the only incentive needed is love for the work. This is true in the broadest sense of the term, but it is also true that "Provoking one another to good works," is a method which has Divine sanction, and from which the highest results are often received. So long as we do not strive for mere personal ambition, or for vainglory, I feel quite confident that any honest emulation is not to be deprecated, but to be encouraged.

Good reports are coming in from the organizers. Mrs. Unruh has been working in Iowa, and Mrs. Dunham says has done grand work. From Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio, there comes a letter concerning a union organized there by Mrs. Skelton. This sentence is worthy of note:—"Mrs. Henrietta Skelton has been with us for a week, and, after hard labor, has loved and prayed us into organizing a union." A very excellent way to start, and we are expecting such a union to continue, and to grow in grace. Its membership is twenty-five active, and fifteen honorary members, and among the honorary members are the most prominent men of the town, including pastors of churches, the president of a bank, and the superintendent of the Pennsylvania railroad interests in the town. We bid the new union cordial welcome. Mrs. Tomlinson, also, has been working in Louisiana since the convention, and reports a very thorough system of work there on the part of the state officers in planning for the work of an organizer. They are not hurried on from one point to another, but allowed to stay several days, or even a week in one place, holding mothers' meetings, children's meetings, and closing with a grand mass-meeting. "Make haste slowly," is an admirable motto in organizing work, and, if only all the state officers could see the wisdom of this, I am sure we would be called upon to mourn fewer dying unions.

Unions in Chicago and vicinity are called upon to note that Dr. Mark Thompson will give lectures, with fine stereopticon views, assuming all risks, if the women will work up the meetings, and sell the tickets at a low rate. He wishes especially to bring in the young people, boys and girls and to train them in temperance principles, by means of the eye as well as the ear. This good news of a Western city is counterbalanced for the East by the announcement that Dr. O. B. Bird, of Elm, N. J., who is well known as a speaker of marked ability, will be very glad to make engagements about Philadelphia and vicinity; indeed, in any part of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware, and New York. He is an exceedingly interesting speaker. He can be written to personally as to terms.

I hope the unions will especially observe the new Red Letter day, which will be inaugurated on January 3d, the birthday of Madam Willard. It is called Mothers' Day, and the suggestion came first, I believe, from Dr. Delano, of Evanston, our staunch, steadfast friend. Of course, the program can be arranged by the local union, but it is planned chiefly to show the mothers their privileges, to induce them to value more highly those privileges, and to learn the most effective way of using them for the best good of the children. Mothers' meetings of various kinds should be more effective than anything else, though public addresses upon that subject in various localities could not be amiss. Selections from Miss Willard's writings, especially her last book, "A Great Mother," would be opportune.

The chairman and secretary of the committee on resolutions for the convention of 1896 have at last been chosen and are, Mrs. Sophie F. Grubb, Kirkwood, Mo., chairman; and Mrs. Ellen Denney, of Albany, N. Y., secretary. The other members of the committee are Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, Mrs. J. H. Knox, Miss Belle Kearney, and Mrs. Dorcas Spencer. Please bear these names in mind and let the subject matter of resolutions be sent at an early date.

Treasurer's Corner

Christmas, with its loving preparations and joyous anticipations of tokens of remembrance, is near at hand and fills the thoughts and hands of many of our women, and it is well that in this work-a-day world, we should pause for a little, and give the hands rest, and let the heart hold sway over the busy moments as they fly. We celebrate the birth of one who gave all He had—His time, His words, His life for humanity. We are here in His stead, to carry on His work in His name. He is our exampler, shall we not give ourselves for the work God has given us to do? The W. C. T. U. has done wisely in deciding to bestow its gifts to the needy ones and needy work, rather than lavish it upon those who do not need it. Tokens of love between home friends need not be expensive and yet they will carry the loving thought as effectually as though many dollars were expended in their purchase. The National has assurance that gifts are coming for its Christmas stocking, which will surely be open at the top and no holes in the bottom. Send them on and every dollar shall be used to further on needy work.

The endowment of the National has been enlarged by one dollar each from Mrs. A. M. Wicks, Attica, N. Y.; Mrs. P. K. Martin, Indiana; Mrs. Chas. Billingsley, Indiana. Birthday has been remembered by Margaret T. W. Merrill, of Maine. The Minutes will not be ready to send out until after New Year's, and all orders now in hand will then be filled at once. They are fifteen cents. In order to expedite matters, and at Miss Willard's request, we have decided to send out the remainder of her addresses at fifteen cents. Why not order several, and give one to each pastor and other friends who will not likely see it? That would be a good Christmas present, and would cost but a trifle. Every one should be on its mission to arouse thought and conscience.

nerves

Neuralgia is often nothing but the prayer of a nerve for food. Sciatica is another obstinate nerve trouble often resisting treatment for weeks at a time. Repeated attacks of neuralgia of the stomach are followed by marked decrease in vitality. Chronic rheumatism, with rigid muscles, stiff joints, and a dibilitated system, is often associated with a scrofulous condition.

Home Hints

When suffering from toothache or neuralgia caused by a defective tooth, apply a bit of cotton saturated in a solution of ammonia to the tooth and the pain will quickly subside.

Peanut Taffy. One cup of molasses, two cups of sugar, half a cup of butter, quarter of a cup of vinegar, one quart raw peanuts blanched. Boil all together until brittle. Add half a teaspoonful of soda just before removing from the stove. Stir briskly and pour into buttered pans.

English walnut candy. Two cups of white sugar, two-thirds cup of milk, butter size of an egg. Boil ten minutes and when taken from the stove, add one pound chopped English walnuts. Beat until cool enough to make into small balls.

A small block of pumice stone is the best thing known for erasing from the hands ink spots or stains of any kind. Keep a piece in the dish with your toilet soap and having tested it a time or two you will never be without it. If your finger tips are rough so that you cannot handle sewing or embroidery silks without tangling them, try the pumice stone on them. This, of course, does not apply to chapped hands, but to roughened spots such as are made by continuous pricking of the finger when sewing, or calloused places from sweeping.

Save all the little boxes, bits of baby ribbon, pretty cord, etc., which come to hand, as they will be needed for doing up the Christmas packages. With a little ingenuity and crepe paper the boxes can be made things of beauty, and will add much to the dainty appearance of the gifts. Or they may be filled with home made candy, always an acceptable present in this candy-loving country.

Most of us know what a peculiar faculty the pockets of kitchen aprons have of catching every protruding thing within reach. Moral: Don't have pockets on the outside. Here is the new way. Use two widths of gingham, cutting them long enough to come to the bottom of the dress when finished. Make two side gores of one width, and gore the full front breadth slightly. In each seam leave a pocket hole, as we used to in our dress skirts. Instead of setting the pockets in, make them by stitching pieces of the goods on the under side of the apron, extending all around and below the pocket holes. Face the openings neatly and the pockets are invisible. One will be tempted to prolong the kitchen work just for the pleasure of luxuriating in such capacious and convenient pockets.

The air in the dining-room and sitting-room should be entirely changed before the family assembles for breakfast. Very often the stagnant air affects one's appetite for the morning meal. Have the windows opened the first thing in the morning long enough to have the air entirely changed, ten minutes will be sufficient, and there will then be ample time to get the rooms warmed again before the breakfast bell rings.

Where there is a sensitiveness about the teeth and gums, and there is no imperfect tooth or filling to cause it, it may be found that the gums have receded somewhat from the surface of the teeth. This comes from the action of acids and may be counteracted by rinsing the mouth daily with a mild solution of common baking soda and water. This is given on the authority of an experienced dentist.

Perhaps to some of our readers who pack and cure the meats used in their homes during the winter, the following old recipe may be acceptable. It is said to be a hundred years old. Anne E. Miller says it is as good as when first formulated, and she knows of none better. For pork, ham and beef, to one hundred pounds of meat use nine pounds of salt (rock salt is best but other kinds do very well) three pounds of sugar, one pint of molasses, three ounces of saltpeter, one ounce of soda, five or six gallons of water. Put all together in cold water, heat slowly till the salt is dissolved. Boil and skim well, and when cold cover the meat with the pickle. Keep the meat under pickle (with heavy weights if necessary) five or six weeks. Then smoke according to taste, one week, daytimes being the rule given.

BIBLE READING FOR JANUARY, LIBERTY IN CHRIST, by Mrs. Mary H. Hull:—The key-note of this reading is one which every white-ribboner would do well to take as her own for the coming year. Mrs. Hull's interpretation of spiritual things is eminently practical and her exposition of Christian liberty can not fail to be truly helpful to every woman, who, as one dear sister expressed it, wants a religion that "will help her wash dishes." Let every union which does not already use our monthly Bible Readings, begin the new year by sending in a subscription. Price ten copies per year to one address, $1.00. Single copies per year 12 cents.

RESPONSIVE READING FOR JANUARY. Repeated calls from unions all over the country for Mrs. Benjamin's reading on SCHOOLS OF METHODS AND PARLIAMENTARY USAGE has made it advisable to keep this valuable help in stock. Therefore Mrs. Benjamin has revised and brought up to date her former Responsive Reading on this subject and we issue it as the January number. The enormous demand for this reading is sufficient proof of its popularity and helpfulness. Wherever used it is a great stimulus to orderly and therefore more effective work—in fact, no union can afford to miss its wise suggestions. This publication will be plated and may hereafter be ordered at any time and in any quantity. Price each, 1 cent; per 100, 25 cents

THE LITERARY WORKS OF MARY T. LATHRAP, POEMS, ADDRESSES, ETC. Read the following from Miss Willard's pen, and secure for yourself this choice volume, which will be sent, postpaid, $1.70 cloth; $2.20, half morocco:

GERMANTOWN, PHILA., PA., October 28, 1895.

Julia R. Parish,

MY DEAR SISTER:—Not until I came here, to the home of our dear Miss Sallie Greene, did I see the beautiful book you had left for me—our beloved Mary T. Lathrap's life. It is a monument for which every white-ribboner should be glad and grateful, for it enshrines for us forever and a day an outline of that great life, and preserves those lovely poems and masterful orations, never excelled and almost never equaled by any woman in America.

Dr. Lathrap has shown his good sense in expending upon such an imperishable monument to his wife that which many men exchange for a mere shaft of stone, to be set in some cemetery, unvisited and unknown.

To all our speakers, writers and workers, this book, by its beauty and originality, will be of incalculable worth, while as a memorial of her, it is praise to say that the volume is worthy of a work so rare and a memorial so choice as hers. Nothing will be more helpful to the great cause for which Mary T. Lathrap expended her great life, than that this book should have the widest possible sale and reading throughout the ranks of the white-ribbon army.

Let me congratulate you, dear friend, on the wise and womanly way in which you have carried out the high and delicate task confided to you. I feel sure that Mary would say it is just as I could wish.

Believe me, dear sister,
Yours in joyful service,
FRANCES E. WILLARD.

CHILHOWEE BOYS IN WAR TIME, by Sarah E. Morrison.

All who followed the adventures of the young pioneers in Miss Morrison's "Chilhowee Boys" will be delighted to renew their acquaintance with them and sympathize with their trials during the exciting days of the War of 1812, which came with peculiar hardships on the settlers of Tennessee. There is a genuine ring to Miss Morrison's work; her characters are clearly differentiated, and stand out in pleasing contrast; they are full of life and spirits, and in that unknown region they find plenty of interesting work to do, plenty of hair-breadth escapes to undergo. There is not a dull page in the book. "Chilhowee Boys" and "Chilhowee Boys in War Time" may be safely recommended for young people. Every genuine American cannot help feeling proud of the fact that they chronicle real events, and present things and people as they were at the beginning of this wonderful century.

T. Y. Crowell & Co, New York and Boston. Price $1.50.

HALF A DOZEN BOYS, by Annie Chapin Ray, though not one of the new books of the season is still a treasure in store for the young people to whom it is yet unknown. Few books have ever given a greater impression of wholesome reality. It may be because the six boys whose fortunes are chronicled were drawn from life. Miss Ray in her new preface says: "They are all real boys, and to-day our friendship is as firm as ever. The next Yale catalogue will show the names of four of them; one is at sea, and of the sixth I have lost all knowledge. They are real boys still; but in the tall, dignified young student, I miss the harum-scarum Teddy—the irrepressible Phil." In the book they are perennially the same, and the new edition with its cleverly drawn, animated illustrations will not fail to attract not only new readers, but many who have already made the acquaintance of the lively six, and followed them in their little history. T. Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston. Price $1.50.

...Books...

Now that the winter evenings are here, old and young need some good book that will instruct as well as amuse, to pass away the time. Below we give a partial list of books suitable for all:

A GREAT MOTHER. By FRANCES E. WILLARD and MRS. MINERVA B. NORTON. There could be no more fitting title to the biography of Mary T. Hill Willard than that which is assigned to this volume. It is customary among a certain type of minds to speak of wifehood and motherhood as a woman's only profession but not often do we find those who are willing, to lift it to the rank of a profession, or consider the fulfillment of its duties as requiring a special preparation of heart and brain, and a mighty consecration of purpose. Madam Willard made of motherhood the holiest of professions. Like Paul she "magnified her office," and accepted it as a perpetual benediction; therefore the world has a right to the record of her life-work as truly as to the records of its masters in other professions. Bound in silver and gray. Price, $1.50.

CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE. By MARY ALLEN WEST. The childhood of to-day is the nation of to-morrow! There is no more important work than its care and culture, physical, intellectual, spiritual. To this end Childhood, Its Care and Culture was written. In a letter to Miss West, Madam Willard wrote: "If I could have but one book beside the Bible to help me in bringing up children, I would by all means choose to have this. Sold by subscription. Agents wanted. Bound in cloth, marble edges, $3.00, Full morocco, gilt edges, $4.25.

CONFIDENTIAL TALKS WITH YOUNG WOMEN. By LYMAN B. SPERRY, M. D., Lecturer on Sanitary Science, Carleton College, Minn. Author of Concerning Narcotics, Confidential Talks with Young Men, etc., with introduction by Frances E. Willard and Mary Wood Allen. This helpful volume, treating an important subject from a Christian, medical point of view, should be carefully read, and its contents imparted to the daughters of to-day. 16mo. cloth, price, 75 cents.

BEFORE HE IS TWENTY. Five perplexing phases of the boy question considered. By ROBERT J. BURDETTE, FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, EDWARD W. BOK, MRS. BURTON HARRISON and MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT. With portraits of the authors. 16mo, cloth, gilt top. "The boy of the period is unquestionably interesting. He is more so than was his brother of a century ago. . . . It means much, particularly to parents who are charged with the responsibility of a training that must adjust itself, in a greater or less degree, to the time their boys are born, live and shall live. . . . It is for the purpose of presenting the wisest and best concentrated modern thought on the different phases of the boy of the period that the articles in this little book were conceived."—PREFACE. Price 75.

HYGIENE OF THE HOME. By SUSAN BURR BARNES. A valuable guide along the lines of home keeping. A good book for housekeepers and mothers. Cloth bound. Price 75 cents.

MARCHING SONGS NO 3. NEW. Fresh from the press, full of bright, sparkling tunes, suitable for Senior and Junior Legions. 96 pages and cover. Price 15 cents. Numbers 1 and 2. 10 cents. Compiled by ANNA A. GORDON. The collection includes temperance songs for use in Kindergarten and Kitchen Garden Schools, songs which teach Sabbath observance, kindness to animals and other kindred principles which it is wise to instill early into the minds of the "cold water army" if we would have them embodied in the law of the land.

THE YEAR'S BRIGHT CHAIN. Compiled by ALICE M. GUERNSEY. A gift book of quotations from Miss Willard's writings, illustrated for young people. Price, cloth, 50c.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. The story of the life of Mary E. Willard—"My Sister Mary," as she is yet tenderly called by the author. A writer says: "It is the most entrancing of all histories. To the cultivated and appreciative reader of every age, sex and sect, there is spread out here a rare and rich feast from the enjoyment of which he must arise a purer, stronger and better nature." Price, paper, 10 cents. Handsomely bound in cloth, 75 cents.

THUMB NAIL SKETCHES of White Ribbon women (official) contains brief biographies of the prominent W. C. T. U. workers of the world. Beautifully illustrated, containing forty half tone, cabinet size portraits. One hundred and twenty-five pages neatly bound in cloth and paper. Will interest all White Ribboners. Send for it. Price, cloth, $1.00. Paper, 50 cents.

THE SCIENCE OF MOTHERHOOD. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life," paper, board and illuminated cover. 12mo, 35c. "To be a mother is the grandest vocation in the world. No other human being has a position of such power and influence. She holds in her hands the destiny of nations, for to her is necessarily committed the making of the nations' citizens." This extract from the author's prefatory chapter but enunciates the principle of the little volume, and our readers are sufficiently familiar with the gifted author's former volumes to realize that in this new line of thought they will have a helpful treatise.

A GIFT OF LOVE. By ROSE PORTER. Love texts for 365 days. Long 18mo. Daintily bound, white cloth silver top, boxed. Price $1.00.

A GIFT OF PEACE. By ROSE PORTER. "Peace" texts for every day in the year, with quotations from choice authors in poetry and prose, aptly fitting the text for the day. Uniform with a "Gift of Love." Price $1.00.

BOYS AND OTHER BOYS. GIRLS OF TO-DAY. By LUCY A. SCOTT. Just the books to give needed advice and help to the boy or girl in the critical early teens. Not "goody-goody" but clear, strong, faithful, interesting. Price, paper, 20 cents; cloth, 40 cents.

WHITE RIBBON BIRTHDAY BOOK. A selection for each day from the best writers among women. Edited by ANNA A. GORDON. Illustrated by Mary A. Lathbury. Handsomely bound. Price, $1.00.

EVERY-DAY RELIGION; or, The Common-Sense Teaching of the Bible. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH, author of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life." 12mo, cloth, $1. "In preparing these Lessons, I have aimed not so much to get at the doctrinal truths of our religion, as at the every-day, practical common-sense principles; and to show how to apply these principles to our week-day lives."—PREFACE.

HOW I LEARNT TO RIDE THE BICYCLE. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. In her inimitable style Miss Willard tells in this dainty little volume her experience in learning to master a "steel steed," and as she graphically portrays the various situations leading from many failures to ultimate success, she has interwoven in delightful "side-talks" some exceedingly helpful and practical suggestions as to how failures and discouragements may be turned to success in life, never losing opportunity, as is her wont, to say that which ennobles and uplifts. It is really a fascinating little volume, appealing strongly to all that is best in physical and moral development. Seven full page, half-tone illustrations. Beautifully bound in buckram cloth, tastefully designed cover in ink and silver. Price, 50 cents.

Full and complete catalogues sent on receipt of 2c. stamp.

Signal Notes

HOSPITAL Sunday this year in London realized £61,500.

NORWAY has a prohibition-in-the-statute town, Haugesund, where the king alone has power to grant the sale of intoxicants.

NEW YORK has five hundred and fifty-five churches and more than eight thousand places licensed to sell intoxicating drinks.

THE vote of church members in America has been estimated at 6,501,094. If every one voted as he prayed what would become of the saloons in the midst?

THE principles on which the London Temperance Hospital was started are now being so universally adopted by other hospitals that it has lately been said that it need not any longer exist!

AT a magnificent demonstration in Cork, Ireland, in commemoration of Father Mathew, it was resolved to perpetuate the work of Ireland's temperance apostle and to take practical steps for that purpose.

A MISSIONARY from China, Mr. R. J. Davidson, stated recently at a public meeting in Lewes that fifty years ago in Chung-King not an opium den existed where now are three thousand. This shows the great increase in recent years of the debauching opium habit.

"YOU sent us missionaries to tell us of Jesus, and He has blessed us. Do not now let us be destroyed by the liquor of the white men." This was the touching and irresistible plea of the three earnest chiefs from the Dark Continent to a Christian nation. Is it not also the plea of thousands of God's suffering creatures everywhere?

THE International Supreme Lodge of Good Templars says to its members: "Break the bands of political servitude and stand forth free. Be consistent with the principles and teachings of our order. If the liquor traffic is a social crime of unequaled enormity, the political party that perpetuates it fosters it, or fails to declare against it is certainly not entitled to the sanction of your ballot."

AT Maidstone, recently, the action of a local brewer who withdrew his support from the church because of the vicar's attitude upon the temperance question, drew forth at a public conference a rousing resolution, which was carried with applause: "That this meeting is of opinion that the time has arrived when all sections of the church should decline to receive money for church purposes from publicans, wine merchants, brewers and distillers."

MRS. JULIA WARD HOWE writes to a Boston paper, giving the figures collected by her husband and herself regarding Turkish massacres of Christians in modern times. During her own lifetime nearly 100,000 Christians have been murdered by the Turks. In 1822 a Turkish army killed 23,000 Greek Christians on the Island of Chios and sold into slavery 47,000. This is the largest single item, but the slaughter has been almost without intermission.

AN English clergyman recently returned from South Africa, states that Johannesburg, which, ten years ago, was a place with twenty native huts, is now a town of 100,000 persons, 60,000 Europeans and 40,000 natives. The cemetery already has 4,000 occupied graves, mostly the graves of young men. The Presbyterian minister of Kimberley, during the time of the great boom, in three years buried two hundred young Englishmen, killed by fast life there. Sunday in Johannesburg is the day of pleasure. The effect of the life of the Europeans upon the natives is terrible. A gold-miner who had a great deal to do with mines, said: "The natives come to us as niggers; they leave us as devils." Others confirmed that description. No wonder that Khama dreads the coming of the white man as worse than a plague.

REV. DR. FERGUSON, at a gathering of the Scottish Temperance League, in Glasgow, pertinently said: "The visit of the three African chiefs has been a great blessing and a great help to the temperance cause. They have been going through our land giving object lessons in this, that 'the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth,' whether he be black or white. I could use of them the words of the Song of Solomon: 'They are black but comely,' comely with meekness, with humility, Christian homeliness, and also temperance firmness. What better can I call it than temperance missionary zeal? for they have come to us to teach us, and to teach the Queen and Mr. Chamberlain a great lesson in prohibition. I think that that lesson has gone to the heart of the country with this impression, that if we prohibit drink in King Khama's territory should it not be prohibited at home?"

A MAGNIFICENT OFFER.

THE UNION SIGNAL is able to offer, for a limited period, its friends and subscribers an unusual opportunity of obtaining a truly SUPERB PICTURE, a reproduction of one of the greatest paintings of modern or ancient times, Munkacsy's "Christ Before Pilate," for which its present owner paid over $100,000. This wonderful picture covers over seven square feet of surface, is in fourteen oil colors, and reproduces in a marvelously exact manner the facial expressions of the characters portrayed in the great original. It also reproduces the superb coloring of the artist so correctly as to call forth exclamations of surprise and delight. It is indeed a thing of beauty as well as a grand object lesson of lasting durability and is worthy of a place in the finest home in America.

The publishers of THE UNION SIGNAL cannot commend too highly this splendid picture, which is 28x40 inches in size.

It has been commended in strong terms by Daniel Huntington, Esq., ex-president National Academy of Design, New York, and other artists, also by some of the most prominent clergy of this country.

This picture securely packed in strong tube will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of three new subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL with remittance of $3. It will be sent also to all subscribers who will send one year's subscription in advance of expiration of present subscription and $1 additional.

The price of picture postpaid is $2.

AN APPEAL.

One of the notable evenings at the National Convention in Baltimore was that in which the state songs were sung by delegates, etc. In response to several requests we shall publish a souvenir containing these songs and the mottoes of the states, if copy is received at an early date. Will the secretaries of the various states forward copy as early as practicable to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple?

Price, cloth, $1; paper 50 cents. Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

We have heard of a music book called "Sunshine Song Book," and we think that would be not an inappropriate title for "Marching Songs, No. 3." The spirited music will make sunshine as you sing it, and you will rejoice in the work of love which has led Miss Gordon to compile this almost perfect song book. Send 15 cents, and see if our opinion is correct.

We have in press a new edition of "Do Everything," which will contain pictures of the World's officers, in addition to the pages of helpful information contained in this manual. Price 35 cents.
